MCDANIEL HOUSE AND CEMETERY

early 19th century

Private

A modest building, the McDaniel House is of interest for its compact plan. Its north end chimney is particularly noteworthy, being of an attractive design and displaying better than average brickwork.

Despite an unsympathetic renovation in recent years, the house still retains most of its original Federal-style woodwork, including two-piece chairrails and window and door trim. Its original room configuration, consisting of a stair hall and parlor on the first floor, two rooms and hall on the second, two finished attic rooms and a basement kitchen, has also been preserved.

The response of the house to basic living needs, vestiges of its once surrounding farm lands and the small adjacent family cemetery illustrates the self-sufficient lifestyle maintained by the average rural family of Southern Maryland for over three centuries.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Built in the early nineteenth century on the crest of a hill, the McDaniel House is of simple, Federal-style architecture, two stories beneath a gable roof, and three bays wide on both side elevations. Front and rear entrance doors occupy the first bays in from the south end.

Of frame construction over a full, brick walled basement, the principal exterior feature is a large brick chimney that has shallow tiled weatherings beneath a wide free-standing stack. Almost no original features remain on the exterior except the first floor window and door trim and some window sash. All of the exterior is sheathed with German siding and the formerly wood shingled roof with tin.

In a recent renovation of the house the two second floor windows closest to the north end of the east front were removed and a glass, two-panel sliding door installed in their place. This extended the full length of this elevation. On the west, rear elevation a similar two-panel glass door was installed in the area of the former entrance door.

The first floor room configuration consists of a hall at the south end and a single north room. On the second floor there is a small stair hall, a room at the head of the hall and a large north room. The attic houses two small bed-chambers. On the first and second floors the walls are plastered and have beaded baseboards and three-piece chair-rails. Original window and door trim consists of a beaded face board with an applied outer molding. All of the trim is of an early nineteenth century profile. The mantel of the main first floor fireplace, removed and now stored in a nearby barn, is of an attractive well-executed design, having reeded pilasteres below a blocked frieze and shaped cornice shelf. The stair is located on the south wall of the hall and rises in two flights to the second floor. It has a finely turned newel, molded rails and square balusters. At the second floor is a steeply winding and partially enclosed stair leading to the attic.

The basement contains two rooms separated by a brick partition-bearing wall. The north room originally housed the kitchen and has a large, arched fireplace. The north basement wall is almost fully exposed on the exterior and was once covered by a now ruinous, shed-roofed, one-room addition
