CARR-180 3488 Uniontown Road Nicholas Hiteshew House

This lot held the first blacksmith shop in town which was constructed by Nicholas Hiteshew in 1800 at the fork of the road. After his death in 1810, his son Issac and later his grandson Charles ran the shop until 1857 when it was torn down. The brick house now standing at 3488 Uniontown Road was built by Nicholas Hiteshew circa 1809. It is the second house that was built on the property. The first house was a log structure that was located close to the road adjoining the blacksmith's shop. In Nicholas Hiteshew's will, dated September 7, 1809, he directs his executor to "sell the old house which I now live in which said house is to be removed off the land it stands on." To his wife he left "exclusive use of my new house, my smith shop and my land lying at the forks of the road commonly called Uniontown." It is interesting to contrast this house with 3468 Uniontown Road and see how the architectural style changed during the intervening forty years. Both are two-story, three-bay brick structures with Flemish-bond brickwork on the main facade. There is a slight difference in massing with 3468 being broader and having a horizontal visual effect in contrast to 3488's verticality. More noticeable are the different facade arrangements (central vs. side entrance) reflecting corresponding differences in the floor plan. The chimneys also indicate different plans through the small stacks at each gable end in 3468 and the single broad stack in 3488. Window sash, lintels and cornice treatments also show striking differences. In 1861, a large political rally was held at this house, which was then owned by Henry Rial. It was the first "Union Meeting" in the state held to support the Union position during the Civil War. Politicians spoke from the porch of the house to a large gathering of people.
