134 SULLIVAN ROAD

early 19th century

Westminster vicinity

private

134 Sullivan Road displays a number of characteristic features of stone domestic architecture in this region. The house is situated in a slope with a full-story basement on the main facade. A double-tiered porch covers the basement and first story on this facade and an ornamental stick-style bannister is located on the first story. Also, the stone walls under the first story porch are painted white. The first story has two entrances in the centrally located bays of the four bay facade. While the house has recently been remodeled, including the enclosure of the basement porch with sliding glass doors, most of the early features of the house are still intact.
