The Art Academy complex is composed of two distinct buildings: a simple two-and-a-half story west portion with jerkin ends and a towered east building, both of frame. Protruding from the front of a rectangular front gable structure, the square tower supports an open belfry resting on a hexagonal roof. The tower has double, Greek revival entrance doors and a row of blind windows above the roof. Its quill weather vane is a reminder that this was once a primary school.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This two part structure stands on the southeast corner of Harrison and South, facing north on South Street. The structure is frame; its two portions are joined by a two-story hyphen, covered with an A-roof.

The eastern portion of the building is two stories high; its shallow gable end faces the street and has a protruding bell tower. A main entrance, now unused, once led into an anteroom in the tower. Its six-panel double doors remain, framed by pilasters which taper toward the top and carry an entablature.

The tower is quite tall with the open hexagonal belfry far above the roof ridge. The belfry is covered by an eight-sided conical roof topped with a quill weather vane. It rests on the hexagonal roof of the square tower. The cornice of the tower is supported by many closely spaced brackets. Beneath the brackets are blind "windows"; three on each facade; they have an infill of four wooden "lights" and apparently never contained glass. The tower is set into a shallow gable-roofed portico at the front of the building. Two windows with four over four sashes light the second floor of the tower. Additional windows are used in the portico, one being placed on either side of the tower on both floors; these also have four over four sashes. Originally windows on the side of the structure were regularly spaced in each of the four bays; when the structure was converted into a studio, additional window openings were inserted. Now the east wall has a continuous band of window with four over four sashes and six over six sashes alternating. Original windows retain their louvered shutters.

Wide aluminum siding covers the original German ship-lap. The original siding emphasized the flatness and delicacy of the exterior detailing.

The western portion of the Academy is two stories plus an attic in height. Its roof has clipped gable ends. There is a jerkin-headed dormer in the center of the front facade. Like the rest of the building, this portion is covered with white aluminum siding and has black roof and shutters.

From the exterior, this wing resembles a form of dwelling house built in Easton around 1880; it has, however, undergone major alterations. On the inside the main stair has evidently been moved from the center of the building to the west side wall. Interior bearing partitions have been removed to create one large chamber on the first floor. To admit the north light desirable in a studio, wide double hung windows have been inserted between the original second floor windows.

The main entrance to the Art Academy is in the two bay connecting hyphen, under a low overhanging roof.

The interior now serves as gallery and studio space for the Easton Academy of the Arts. Most original details have been removed, or covered when the building was paneled on the inside.

The building stands on the corner, enclosed by a picket fence. Its attractive yard is planted in maple trees and boxwood.

SPECIFIC DATES 1853 BUILDER/ARCHITECT Easton Public Schools

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This interesting structure is significant for its architecture and as the location of the Easton Primary School.

The history of the building is uncertain. Although the east portion would appear to be earlier, the Easton Atlas of 1877 shows the west block and the hyphen. Not until 1885 do both portions appear. Historical records available at this time do not clarify the question. In 1853, according to school records, a frame schoolhouse "forty feet long, twenty-eight feet wide, two stories high, with ceilings ten feet in the clear" was planned to accommodate seventy-five pupils. This could describe either existing wing. The structure cost $3,625.79 and served both male and female students. In 1865, school records refer to the school as the County School. Later it was called the Male School of Easton and still later the Female School of Easton. Which changes required extending the structure, and whether a wing was constructed or moved in, are questions which require further study of the old public school records. Eventually the institution was called the Easton Primary and Grammar School, a name well-known to town residents many of whom recall attending classes there.

In 1933, the town sold the structure and it was used as a funeral home. It was purchased by the Academy of the Arts in 1960 for use as a cultural center. Now it provides classrooms, exhibition galleries, a concert room, and studios for painting, ceramics, and sculpture.

The towered east building is one of the best known structures in the town of Easton. With its quill weather vane, it serves as a symbol of the nineteenth century public school.

In 1787, the first lots of the newly laid out town of Easton were put on sale and Tristram Martin paid £9.15.0 for Lot 48, where the Academy of the Arts now stands. After several speculative sales, it came into the possession of the Rev. Joseph Jackson. He paid £ 65.. to William Webster in 1789 and 1800 turned it over to the Trustees of the Academy at Easton. The Trustees included such prominent men in the community as John Edmondson, Nicholas Hammond, Samuel Chamberlaine, Thomas J. Bullit, William Hayward, Ennalls Martin, Stephen T. Johnson, Perry Benson, John Roberts, Owen Kennard, John Coates, and Hugh Sherwood.

Although the building was not completed until 1820, it was the first school chartered in Easton and remained in use until 1933 when John Williams bought it for use as a Funeral Home and Antique Shop. (cont.)
