Daniel Scholl House
Frederick
Private

1830

Although substantially changed since it was first built in the second quarter of the nineteenth century, the Daniel Scholl House retains many of its original features representative of farm houses of this period. The building was demolished in 1980 for a subdivision.

The house appears to have evolved in two stages. The main block, constructed of log with German joints and wide whitewashed plank siding in the east and west gable ends, was built by 1830 as evidenced by some simple Federal style molding and detailing remaining in this section of the house. In the 1930's it appears that the later rear two story addition of the house was added and the stucco applied directly over the log.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Daniel Scholl House is a two and one-half story gable roofed residence stuccoed with cement over an ell shaped log and frame structure.

The principal facade is three bays wide. The main entrance is a replaced six panel door set into a one foot wide paneled entranceway with three light transom. Both windows, which have been boarded shut, appeared to have matched the double hung 6/6 windows located on the second level. Each window is surrounded by plain circular molding.

Identical double hung 6/6 windows with circular molding once were located in each bay on the second level although only one section in the second bay remains.

A standing seam hipped tin roof supported by four turned columns extends across the front of the building on the first level. The main block of the building is two bays wide with a two story gable roofed three bay wide addition extending from the northwest corner of the building.

The house appears to have evolved in two stages. The main block constructed of log with German joints and wide whitewashed plank siding in the east and west gable ends was built by 1830 as evidenced by some simple Federal style molding and detailing remaining in this section of the house. In the 1930's it appears that the later rear two story addition of the house was added and the stucco applied directly over the log.

Entrance to the second floor in the main block of the building is by a tight winder staircase in the northwest corner of the house. It does not appear that a formal stairway ever existed in the building.

A small one story hip roofed porch with turned columns similar to the front porch is butted against the main block and rear addition of the building.

The entire structure is built on a low random stone foundation and covered by a standing seam tin roof with plain boxed cornice. Single brick chimneys extend from the east, west and north gable ends.

A brick springhouse with tin hipped roof and frame wagon shed are also located on the premises.

The barn, once a frame bank barn has collapsed; only the high random stone foundation remains.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Although substantially changed since it was first built in the second quarter of the nineteenth century, the Daniel Scholl House retains many of its original features representative of farm houses of this period. The building was demolished in 1980 for a subdivision.

The land upon which the house and farm was built was part of two land grant tracts. Rock Creek which was granted to John Stodart on May 28, 1728 and Locust Level which was granted to Daniel Dulaney October 12, 1750.¹

In 1834, Daniel Scholl purchased the land from George Smith² and in the next thirty-two year added four additional parcels to the farm purchasing land from Valentine Adams in 1843,³ George Fout in 1845,⁴ Michael Haller in 1866,⁵ and John Smith in 1867.⁶

The house and land was owned and operated as a farm until 1966 when it was purchased for speculation.
