Benjamin Hall House
New Market
Private

C. 1806

The Benjamin Hall House is a two story coursed and random stone gable roofed residence with accompanying outbuildings all of which are of exceptionally fine quality and style for the area.

The principle facade, which was built in three sections, is five bays wide. The facade is built of coursed random stonework; other elevations are built of random stone. The house was built in three parts. The west section, with pegged six panel door and stepped brick cornice with dentiled brickwork, is the oldest; the east section exhibits exceptional stonework including keystone stone lintels and dates to the first half of the nineteenth century. A two story Victorian addition with bayed window, dentiled cornice and decorative brackets extends to the rear of the east section.

Three large stone outbuildings and a stone and brick bake oven also stand on the premises.

The land upon which the buildings stand, once comprised of 1054 acres, was first conveyed in 1755 to Benjamin Hall and was named "Halls Choice." Later in 1844 the name was changed to "Benjamin's Luck." The land descended through Joseph Hall to his son, Nicholas Hall. In March, 1806 for the price of 350 pounds, Benjamin Hall purchased the property and he and his wife resided in the house until 1844 when he sold part of the property to his son Joel, in a very unusual deed which divided the house as follows: "by a strait line to meet the south end of the partition dividing the west room from two east rooms in the mansion house of said Benjamin Hall in which he now resides."

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Benjamin Hall House is a two story coursed and random stone gable roofed residence which faces south from the north side of Crickenberger Road near New Market.

The house and accompanying outbuildings are of exceptionally fine quality and style for the area. The coursed stonework of the residence is one of the finest examples found in the New Market Region.

The principle facade which was built in three sections is five bays wide. The facade is built of coursed random stonework; other elevations are built of random stone.

The west section appears to be the oldest part of the building because of the diminutive size of the windows and door and interior woodwork which remains. This sections is two bays wide and one room deep. An entrance, a pegged six panel door with window inserts and simple four light transom is located in the second bay.

Located in the remaining bays are double hung 6/6 windows. Over each bay on the facade of the west section of the house are keystone stone lintels. On the second level the keystones project into a stepped brick cornice with dentiled brickwork. The stonework of the west section is very similar to the treatment of the front section of the Anthony Kimmel House.

The east section of the building is three bays wide and one room deep. It is constructed of similarly fine coursed stonework on the facade. A two story stone addition extends to the rear. The main entrance, a pegged six panel door with window inserts and four light transom is located in the second bay.

Both windows on the first level of the east section have undergone substantial changes. The window in the first bay is a replaced 1/1 window; a larger 1/1 window has been placed in the third bay. Located in all three bays on the second level are double hung 6/6 windows with wood lintels. Keystone stone lintels are also located over each bay in the west section. A plain boxed cornice with a return which appears to be a replacement attaches the roof in the west section. A replaced but old slate flank gabled roof covers both sections of the main residence.

A three bayed frame window, with a dentiled cornice and decorative brackets extends eastward from the second level of the rear addition of the building located directly over a modern entrance porch or, the east side of the house.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Benjamin Hall House is a very fine example of the stone architecture found in the New Market area of Frederick County. The coursed stonework of the main residence with keystone lintels is particularly unusual and not found on other stone buildings in the area.

The existence of three stone outbuildings including a large brick and stone bake oven (in good condition) is also quite uncommon.

The land upon which the buildings stand, once comprised of 1,054 acres, was first conveyed in 1755 to Benjamin Hall and was named "Halls Choice". Later in 1844, the name was changed to "Benjamin Luck".

The land descended through Joseph Hall to his son, Nicholas Hall. In March, 1806, for the price of 350 pounds Benjamin Hall purchased the property¹ and he and his wife resided in the house until 1844 when he sold part of the property to his son, Joel, in a very unusual deed which divided the house as follows: "by a strait line to meet the south end of the partition dividing the west room from the two east rooms in the mansion house of said Benjamin Hall in which he now resides." ²

The Hall family finally sold the property to Charles Duvall in 1870 for $18,000.³ Several different families have owned it since that time.

The Benjamin Hall House

To the rear of the entire structure is a small two story frame addition added in the twentieth century.

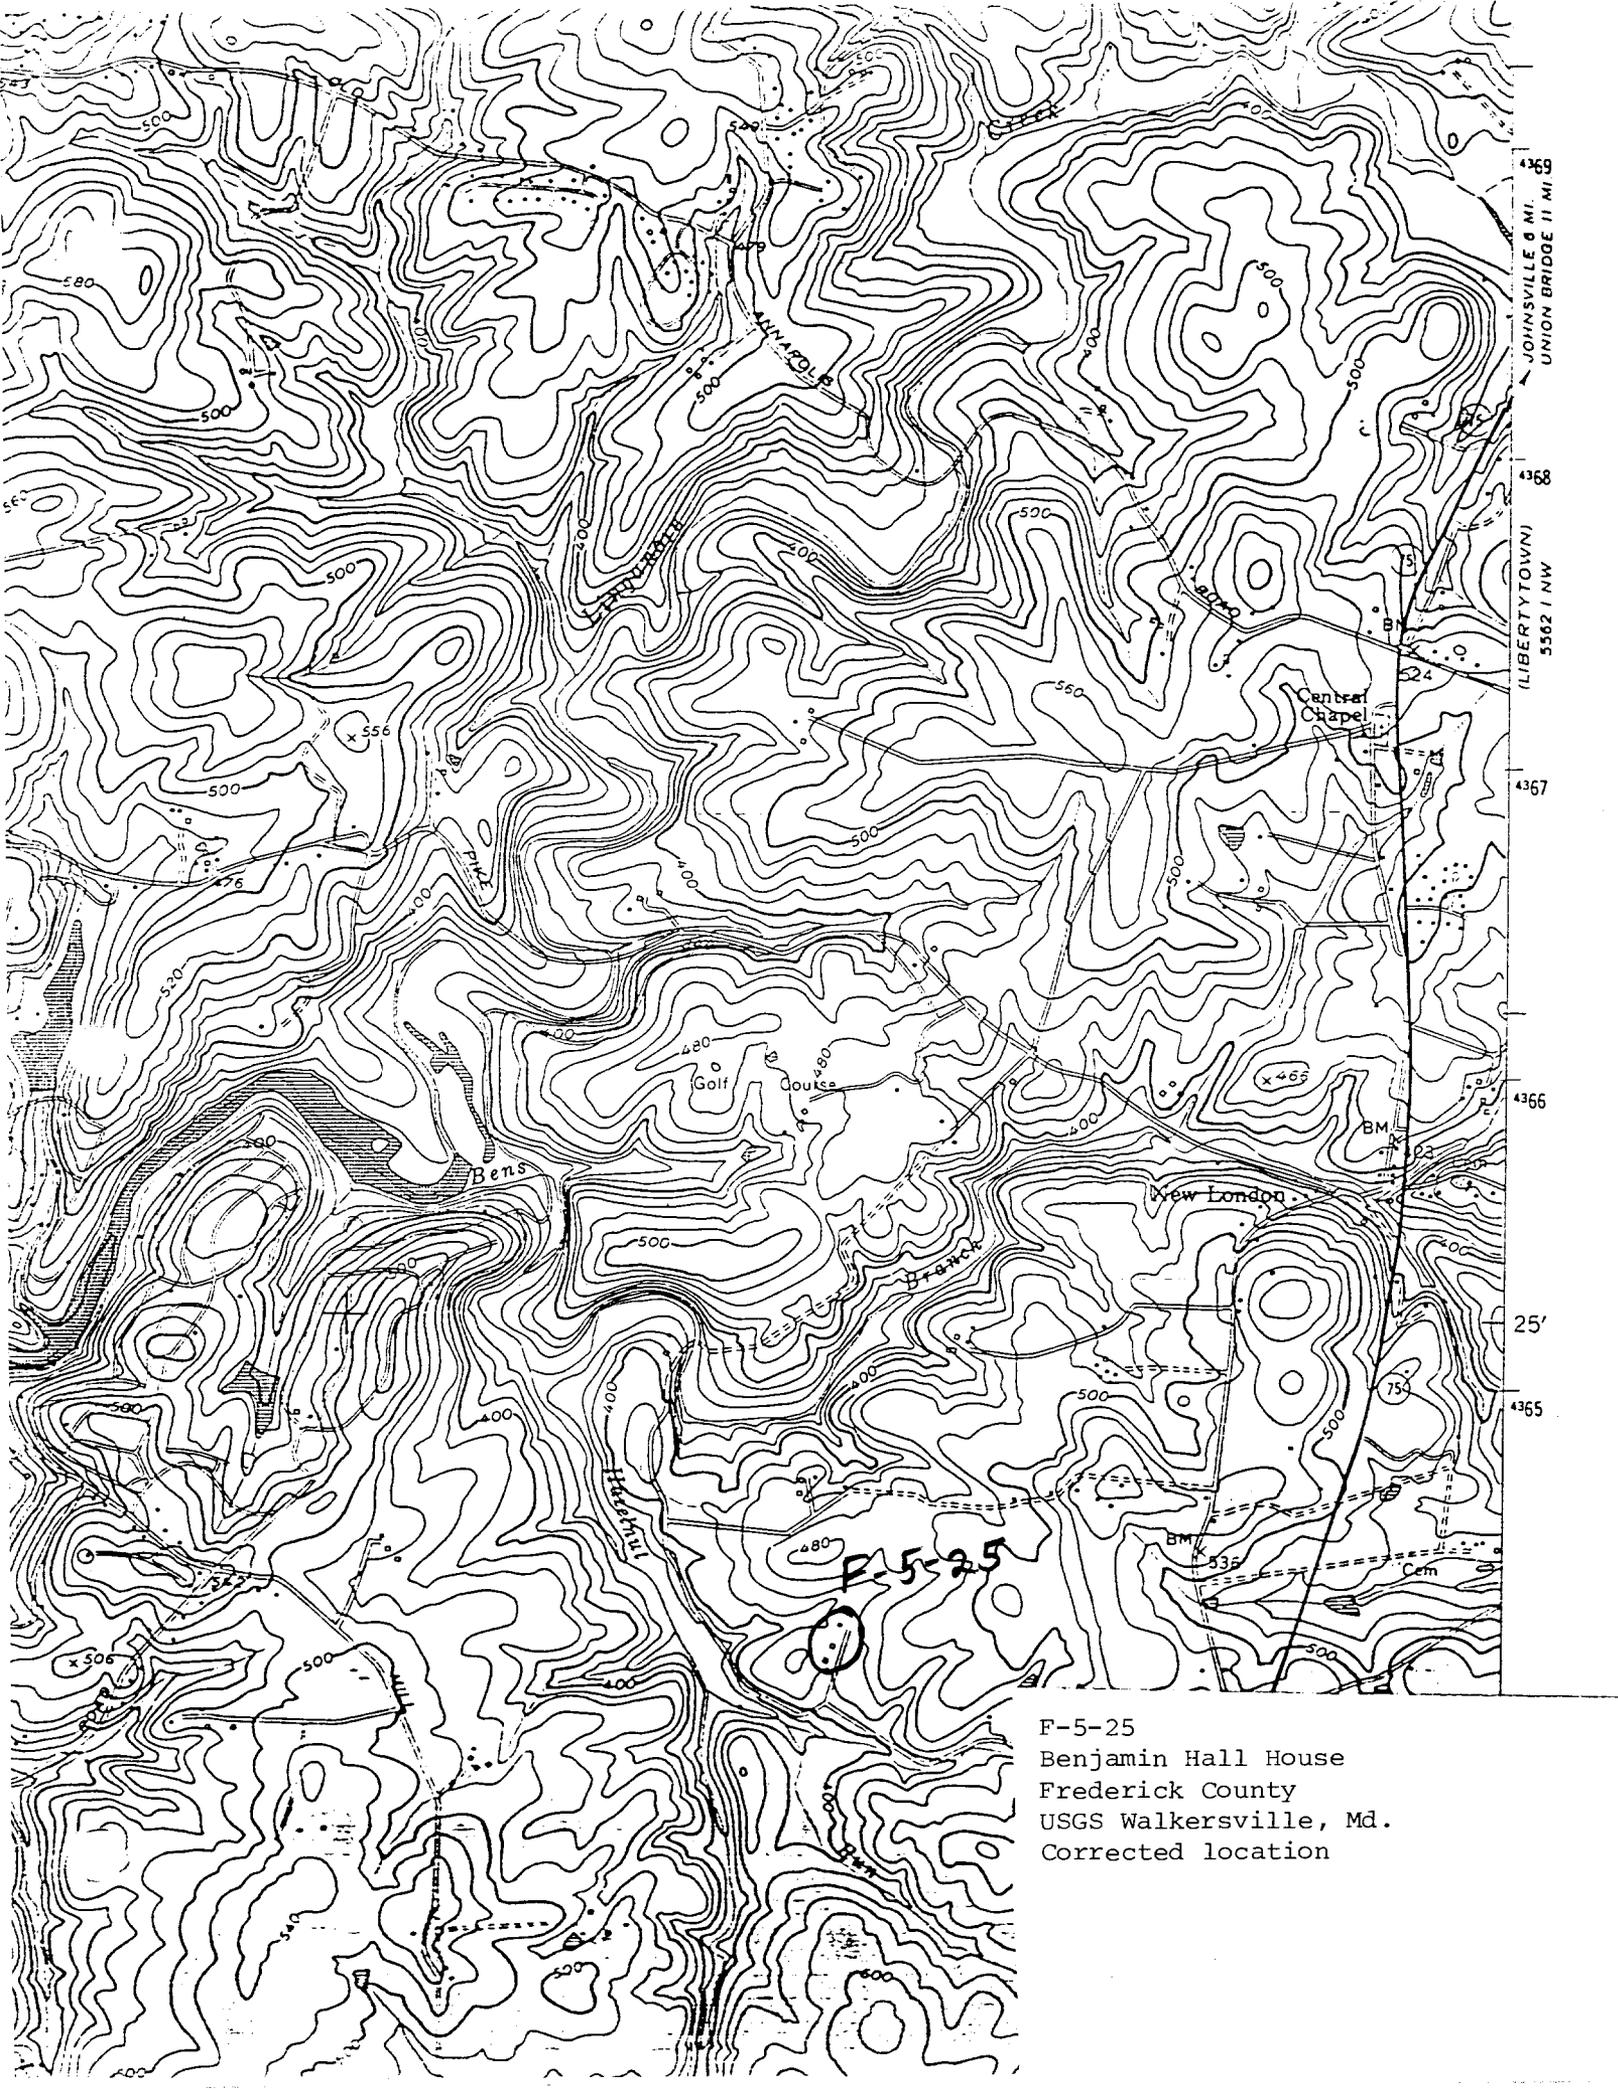

Four interior brick chimneys are located on the building; straddling the gable on the north, east, west, and center of the front section of the house.

Located just to the rear of the main residence is a two story random stone outbuilding, four bays wide and one room deep. The building is believed to have been used as a summer kitchen and servants quarter. Entrances are located in the second and third bays of the first level. Replaced double hung 6/6 windows occupy the first and fourth bay on both the first and second levels. Flat brick arches are located over each bay. The flank gable roof is slate and is attached to the building by a three stepped brick cornice. A small interior brick chimney flanks the gable on the west side.

A large bake oven, one of the most unusual features of the site, is located immediately west of the main house. It is sheltered under a front gable roof and is built on a coursed stone foundation. A brick wall encloses the oven on all except the north side of the building.

A stone workshed and additional square stone outbuilding are located west of the house. The square outbuilding is believed by the owner, to have been used as a small school during its past, however, it appears to be similar to a large springhouse.

Two other buildings located on the original tract of land associated with the building are a two story flemish and common bond brick building, located one mile west of the Benjamin Hall House, and two story frame building just south of Crickenberger Road.
