Richard Gartrell Farmstead
Mt. Airy vicinity
Private

Ca. 1898-1920

The Richard Gartrell Farmstead includes a much-altered two-story frame dwelling with several frame outbuildings of a late 1890's farmstead surviving and currently in use as the Linganore Wine Cellars. The principal domestic outbuildings are a log smokehouse with clapboard siding, a frame springhouse, three chicken houses, a frame and stone bank barn, a wagon shed/corn crib and a tractor shed. The farmstead may be the successor of an earlier farmstead located just east of the present buildings, marked by two deteriorated frame buildings which may be the surviving outbuildings. Richard Gartrell (1810-1881) is shown on historical maps and in the land records as the owner of a farm on the site from about 1846 to his death. His daughters sold the property to Emory E. Dayhoff (1861-1930) in 1889, in return for a cash payment and the building of a small house for them. Dayhoff may have erected the new farmstead during the 1890's, possibly moving the log smokehouse from the earlier group. Because of the considerably alteration to the buildings, the farmstead is minimally significant in architecture for the most intact buildings, the smokehouse, the springhouse, and the wagon shed/corn crib.

CONTRIBUTING RESOURCE COUNT: 9

The Richard Gartrell Farmstead is centered on a greatly altered two-story frame dwelling of about the 1890's and its associated outbuildings including a frame and stone bank barn, a wagon shed/corn crib, a smokehouse, a springhouse, a privy, and three chicken houses of approximately the same period. Several non-contributing silos, a milk house, a tenant house, and other modern structures are also in the building group and two deteriorated frame structures reportedly part of an earlier farmstead no longer extant are located east of the principal buildings. The property is currently the Linganore Wine Cellars and is located on the south side of Glissans Mill Road about 0.6 miles southeast of the intersection of Harrisville Road near Mt. Airy, Frederick County, Maryland. The complex is located about 1500 feet south of the road and the principal residence is an L-shaped structure with its principal elevation on the east side. The outbuildings are located south of the dwelling. The dates of the buildings are based on architectural evidence, land records, and historical maps. The historical name is chosen based on the name appearing on the 1858 and 1873 maps; however, deeds and the apparent dates of the buildings indicate that the Gartrell buildings may have been superceded by the existing structures built by subsequent 19th and early 20th century owners. Emory E. Dayhoff, the owner from 1889 to 1896, may be revealed by more detailed research to have been responsible for many of the existing buildings.

The dwelling consists of two rectangular sections adjoining at the southeast corner with porches on both the east and south elevations. The exterior of the house is covered with vinyl siding and the roof is standing seam metal. An off-center chimney rises from the section facing east. The east elevation has four bays with an entrance in the north central bay. The door has a glass panel. The windows on the first story are 2/2 and appear to be original. On the second story, the window sizes have been altered. The one-story porch has replaced square posts. The south wing of the house has gable ends on the east and west and a two-story porch facing south. The porch has replacement square posts and a plain balustrade on the upper level. At the southwest corner is an enclosed section on both side of the porch. In the east gable end is a single center bay and on the west side is a one-story enclosed porch. The interior of the house has been considerably changed in plan, with some walls removed and finishes replaced or concealed by modern materials. The eastern section has a center hall with flanking parlors, but the junction between the two sections has been almost eliminated by changes to the partition walls.

Domestic outbuildings:

Springhouse: The frame springhouse is located just south of the dwelling. It has clapboard siding and a composition shingle roof. Vertical board doors are in the north and south elevations and 2/2 windows are near the north door and at the south east corner. The springhouse appears to date from the 1890's.

Smokehouse: The log smokehouse is located west of the dwelling and has clapboard siding. A vertical board door is in the east elevation and the gable roof

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Richard Gartrell Farmstead is minimally significant in architecture for the remaining original farm outbuildings of the late 19th century, including a log smokehouse with clapboard siding, a frame springhouse, and a wagon shed/corn crib. Other outbuildings and the main dwelling of the farmstead have considerably reduced integrity because of extensive alterations in materials and finishes. An earlier farmstead on the property may have been located east of the existing late 19th century structures. Richard Gartrell (1810-1881) settled on this property in 1848 according to the Business Directory included in the 1873 Titus Atlas of Frederick County. The log smokehouse may be a structure of the 1840's moved to the new farmstead erected by a subsequent owner, possibly Emory E. Dayhoff (1861-1930), who ned the property from 1889-1896. One clue to support the possibility of an earlier building group is a reference in Dayhoff's purchase deed of 1889 in which he agreed to erect a small house for the three Gartrell sisters, Elizabeth, Martha, and Sarah, as part of the price of the 190-acre farm. It is unclear, however, where this small house was or whether Dayhoff went on to build a second farmstead, leaving the earlier buildings still standing.

covered with corrugated metal. The log structure indicates that the smokehouse may be an early outbuilding moved to the site in the 1890's, since this type of outbuilding in the last quarter of the 19th century was more frequently built of frame, stone, or brick.

Privy: The frame privy is located just west of the smokehouse. It has vertical siding and a corrugated metal shed roof. The door is in the south elevation. It appears to date from the 1890's to about 1900.

Chicken houses: Two of the three frame chicken houses are located on the driveway which continues past the dwelling toward the bank barn and other agricultural buildings at the south end of the farmstead group. The third is located south of the springhouse and has been much altered with modern board and batten siding and a bay window, although it is used as storage space. One of the current owners, Mrs. Allen, said the domestic additions to this structure were to improve the exterior appearance of the buildings in the public access areas of the winery. The other two chicken houses have modern vertical siding and corrugated metal roofs.

Agricultural buildings:

Bank barn: The frame bank barn on a stone foundation is now used as the winery and has several extensions located around the base and including some of the early 20th century dairy buildings in concrete block which are located just northeast of the barn. The barn was probably built in the 1890's and has modern board and batten siding and rectangular louvred vents. The roof is composition shingles. Two concrete silos are near the ramp on the west side and one has a painted sign identifying the winery.

Wagon shed/corn crib and tractor sheds: The frame wagon shed corn crib stands northwest of the barn and has german siding with a corrugated metal roof. The piers supporting the cribs are concrete, but these are probably replacements of original stone piers. Adjoining the wagon shed on the west side and extending to the south and north is an open-sided tractor shed facing east. Some sections of this long shed are enclosed for tool storage. The wagon shed was built about 1890-1900 and the sheds appear to have been built in the first decade of the 20th century.

Frame outbuildings of possible earlier farmstead: Located east of the main farmstead in an open field are two deteriorated frame buildings, each of two stories with german siding. According to Mrs. Allen, these are the remaining outbuildings of an earlier farmstead on the property and were used in association with butchering activities. Further information on the possible early farm has not been discovered in this survey, although the possibility exists that this was the site of the Richard Gartrell farm shown on the 1858 and 1873 maps.
