Richard Johnson House
Urbana vicinity
Private

Ca. 1780-ca. 1920

The Richard Johnson House is a two-story stone dwelling built in three probable sections between 1780 and 1808 with a circa 1800 stone smokehouse as well as a late 19th century wagon shed/corn crib, a circa 1900 frame bank barn, and a frame chicken house of about 1920. The house has a main section with three bays and a side hall entry, adjoined by a side two-story wing which may have been built in two sections beginning about 1780. According to a mid-20th century researcher, the house was gutted by fire at an early date and was reinforced and rebuilt on the interior. Tie rods in the main section seem to indicate that early rehabilitation work was done on the house. The main section was added after purchase of the property by Roger Johnson, the father of Richard Johnson (1781-1831), who owned the property until 1835. The house is moderately significant in architecture for its stonemasonry construction of the period about 1780-1808. It was much altered on the interior in the 1960's and a modern addition was built on the rear of the wing, but retains some interior trim and the main staircase intact.

The Richard Johnson House is a two-story stone dwelling built in at least three stages beginning about 1780 with the last section built about 1808 forming a three-bay main section with a side wing fronted by a two-story open porch. The dwelling has one remaining domestic outbuilding, a stone smokehouse probably built about 1780-1800, and three frame agricultural outbuildings dating about 1875 to 1920, a wagon shed/corn crib, a frame and stone bank barn, and a chicken house. The buildings are located on the north side of Dixon Road about two miles south of Urbana, Frederick County, Maryland. The principal elevation faces south and the outbuildings are located east of the dwelling. The property is entered through a modern stone gate bearing the current name of the farm, "Heritage Hills". Dates are based on architectural evidence and land records.

The principal section of the house is the three-bay section built about 1808 at the west end of the structure. It has a side hall plan with the entrance in the west bay. The raised panel door has 6 panels and a three-light transom. A modern flagstone and brick stoop rises to the doorway. The windows are 6/6 with raised panel wood shutters. The bracketed cornice was added at an unknown date. This Italianate style feature is common to the period about 1850, but its excellent condition and apparent level of craftsmanship suggests that it may have been mid-20th century replacement of a circa 1850's cornice. Since the property was sold in 1871 to Dr. Benjamin Hughes, it is possible that the original bracketed cornice was added at that time to update the appearance of the house and to replace a deteriorated early 19th century cornice. The roof is composition material, replacing a slate roof described in a 1959 Frederick News-Post article by Ralph Martz as being "bedded in a clay mixture". On the west gable end of the main section is a rebuilt exterior brick chimney flanked by 6/6 attic windows. Tie rod ends in the wall appear to have been placed in the 19th century at a date not yet determined. The Martz article refers to a gutting fire in the house during the Johnsons' ownership, which caused the reinforcement of the rear wall and the rebuilding of the interior. Martz's sources or evidence to support the fire theory are not named, but the tie rods' star end plates are also on the north or rear wall of the main section. The Johnsons owned the property until 1835, so the reinforcement could have taken place around that date. The north elevation of the main section also has three bays and the bracketed cornice as on the south elevation. A non-functional rear door at the back of the side hall has a low height and no transom and the off-set window above lights the interior stair landing.

The side wing of the house appears to have been built in two sections, judging by a visible joint on the south elevation, which has a two-story open porch. The first story of the porch is enclosed by screen panels and the upper level has a plain horizontal railing and square posts. The wing has a lower roof height than the main section and the cornice is boxed. The windows are 6/6 with simple molded architraves. The roof is composition as on the main section. An interior end chimney is located at the east gable end. This gable end has no openings except a 6-light attic window and a modern glazed panel door at the first story, opening on .

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Richard Johnson House is moderately significant in architecture for its stonemasonry construction dating from about 1780 to 1808. The vernacular structure has the typical side-wing plan of German building techniques with the main section of about 1808 showing the symmetry of the side hall plan, a subtle influence of the Federal style based on Georgian architectural sources. This plan is common to many stone, brick, and log houses of the first quarter of the 19th century in Frederick County. The earliest section may be one of the apparent two sections of the side wing, although interior and exterior alterations in the 1960's have obscured evidence which may confirm dating. Richard Johnson (1781-1839) was the oldest of 12 children of Roger Johnson (1749-1831), the founder with his three brothers of several iron foundries in Frederick County. Roger Johnson was in charge of Bloomsbury Forge and the Bush Creek Forge near Riehl's Mill. Local tradition states that Roger purchased the property in 1808, which contained the part now a section of the wing, and enlarged for Richard's residence. Richard married Julianna Dorsey in 1815, the usual event which caused the purchase or expansion of a residence, although it is possible that the house was enlarged over the 7 years between 1808 and 1815. In 1835, the Johnsons sold the property to Benjamin Dudderar (1798-1860). In 1871, Dr. Benjamin Edward Hughes bought it and possibly added the bracketed cornice to the main section. Under the ownership of Dr. Hughes and subsequent owners, the surviving agricultural outbuildings were added to the building group.

concrete terrace. Two doors open on the first story of the south side of the wing and one of the windows flanking the center section door is 2/2. The north side of the wing has a 1967 one-story room addition adjoining the wing at a right angle.

The interior of the house has been considerably altered since 1960, but retains some original doors and hardware. The wing has been especially altered by the removal of interior walls and the addition of modern wood paneling. The staircase in the side hall of the main section retains its scroll closers and possibly walnut railing.

Outbuildings:

Smokehouse: The one-story stone smokehouse dating from about 1780-1800 is located northeast of the wing and has a single vertical board door in the south elevation. The roof is corrugated metal. A modern frame pool house addition was built on the rear of the smokehouse after 1960. The smokehouse is now used for storage and as a bath house for the adjoining modern swimming pool.

Wagon shed/corn crib: The frame wagon shed/corn crib was built about 1890-1900 east of the house and domestic outbuildings. It has vertical siding on the south elevation with horizontal vented boards on the crib sides. The original drive passage on the south is boarded and a partially open-sided shed addition on the west elevation is used as a tractor shed. The north elevation of the wagon shed is covered with tongue-and-groove siding and the roof is corrugated metal. On the east side of the wagon shed is a modern residential addition.

Bank barn: The frame bank barn has a stone foundation which may have supported an earlier structure, but the current structure appears to have been built about 1900-1910. Tongue-and-groove siding covers the exterior and sliding doors are on the west side. A non-contributing concrete silo stands near the ramp on the west elevation.

Chicken house: The frame chicken house was built in the first quarter of the 20th century. It has vertical siding and a corrugated metal roof. On the west elevation, the building has a 3/3 window and a second single pane opening.

Gravestone: A grave stone which was salvaged from a family graveyard near the house is located near a fence behind the house. It is inscribed to Laura Johnson, apparently an infant, the daughter of Richard and Julianna Johnson. The Johnsons had three children who survived to adulthood. Other gravestones from the cemetery were removed from the property in the mid-20th century.

Heritage Hills is a large Federal style two and a half story stone house built in two parts which faces southwest from the east side of Dixon Road. Built with a random stone foundation, the main block on the north end is three bays wide with a three light transom door located in the first bay. The gabled roof has two brick chimneys at each end. A boxed cornice with decorative brackets and a plain frieze supports a slate roof. A two story addition to the south side is four bays wide; a three light transom door is located in the second bay. A two storied galleried porch extends from the west side. The asphalt roof with a plain cornice has a brick chimney on the south end. A one story modern addition is located to the west side.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Heritage Hills is important to the Urbana area as one of the remaining houses built by the Johnson brothers when the Johnson Furnace was in operation in the 1780's.

Heritage Hills built with poplar rafters and oak floors was constructed by Major Roger Johnson, the youngest brother of Governor Thomas Johnson, for his son Richard.¹ The eighteen inch walls support a slate roof bedded in a clay mixture. The house is believed to have been gutted by fire when the Johnsons resided there; the rear wall had to be reinforced and the interior remodeled. It is located on "Resurvey on Plummer's Delight", and was named Heritage Hills by the current owners. A graveyard was located to the rear of the house but all of the grave stones have been removed. An inventory of the house in 1835 includes such items as five featherbeds, two dining tables and one tea table.²

Heritage Hills is one of the four Johnson residences remaining in the area. Further research is being done on the Johnson family and furnace complex by the Sugarloaf Regional Trails and more information will be forthcoming.
