Linganore School

Libertytown, Maryland

Private

The Linganore School is a fair example of a one-room schoolhouse of the third quarter of the 19th century. It is similar in form to other schoolhouses of the same period such as the Grove Academy (F-8-90). Converted to a dwelling in the early 20th century, the subsequent alterations have not obscured the school's exterior form.

7.1 Description

The Linganore School is a one-story frame building erected about 1868 on the northwest corner of Dollyhyde Road and Mapleville Road, near Libertytown, Maryland. The gable-roofed schoolhouse originally had a three-bay southeast elevation in the gable end, with a center entrance and two flanking 6/6 windows. The side elevations have three bays with 6/6 sash. The exterior is german siding and the roof is standing seam tin. The stone foundation is visible above ground level. A concrete block chimney rises near the center of the ridgeline. A one-story porch was added to the main elevation possibly after the building was converted to residential use. The porch is currently enclosed by plywood and fiberglass sheets. The building's interior had been gutted and new partitions erected when the conversion took place. Most of the partitions are now removed and no major feature of the building's use as a school remains.

8.1 Significance

The Linganore School is a fair, although altered example of the small one-room schoolhouse of the third quarter of the 19th century. Its form is similar to other schools of the period such as the Grove Academy (F-8-90) and the Ladiesburg School (F-8-97, Ladiesburg Survey District). Minimum standards for local schools were mandated by the State Board of Education, resulting in almost identical facilities in each district. Many have been made into residences, with interiors being most affected, as at the Linganore School.
