Union Chapel

Libertytown, Maryland

Private

Union Chapel is a good example of a hall plan church with a bell tower, a common form among rural churches in the mid-19th century. It was built to house both Lutheran and Reformed congregations as were many German churches in Frederick County.

7.1 Description

Union Chapel is a brick hall plan church with an attached bell tower built in 1863-65 on the southeast corner of Daysville Road and Chestnut Grove Road about 1 1/4 miles west of Libertytown, Maryland. The main elevation faces north. The building was altered in 1954 with the erection of a brick education wing on the south elevation which has a cross gable roofline. A cupola tops the crossing of the original and 1954 sections.

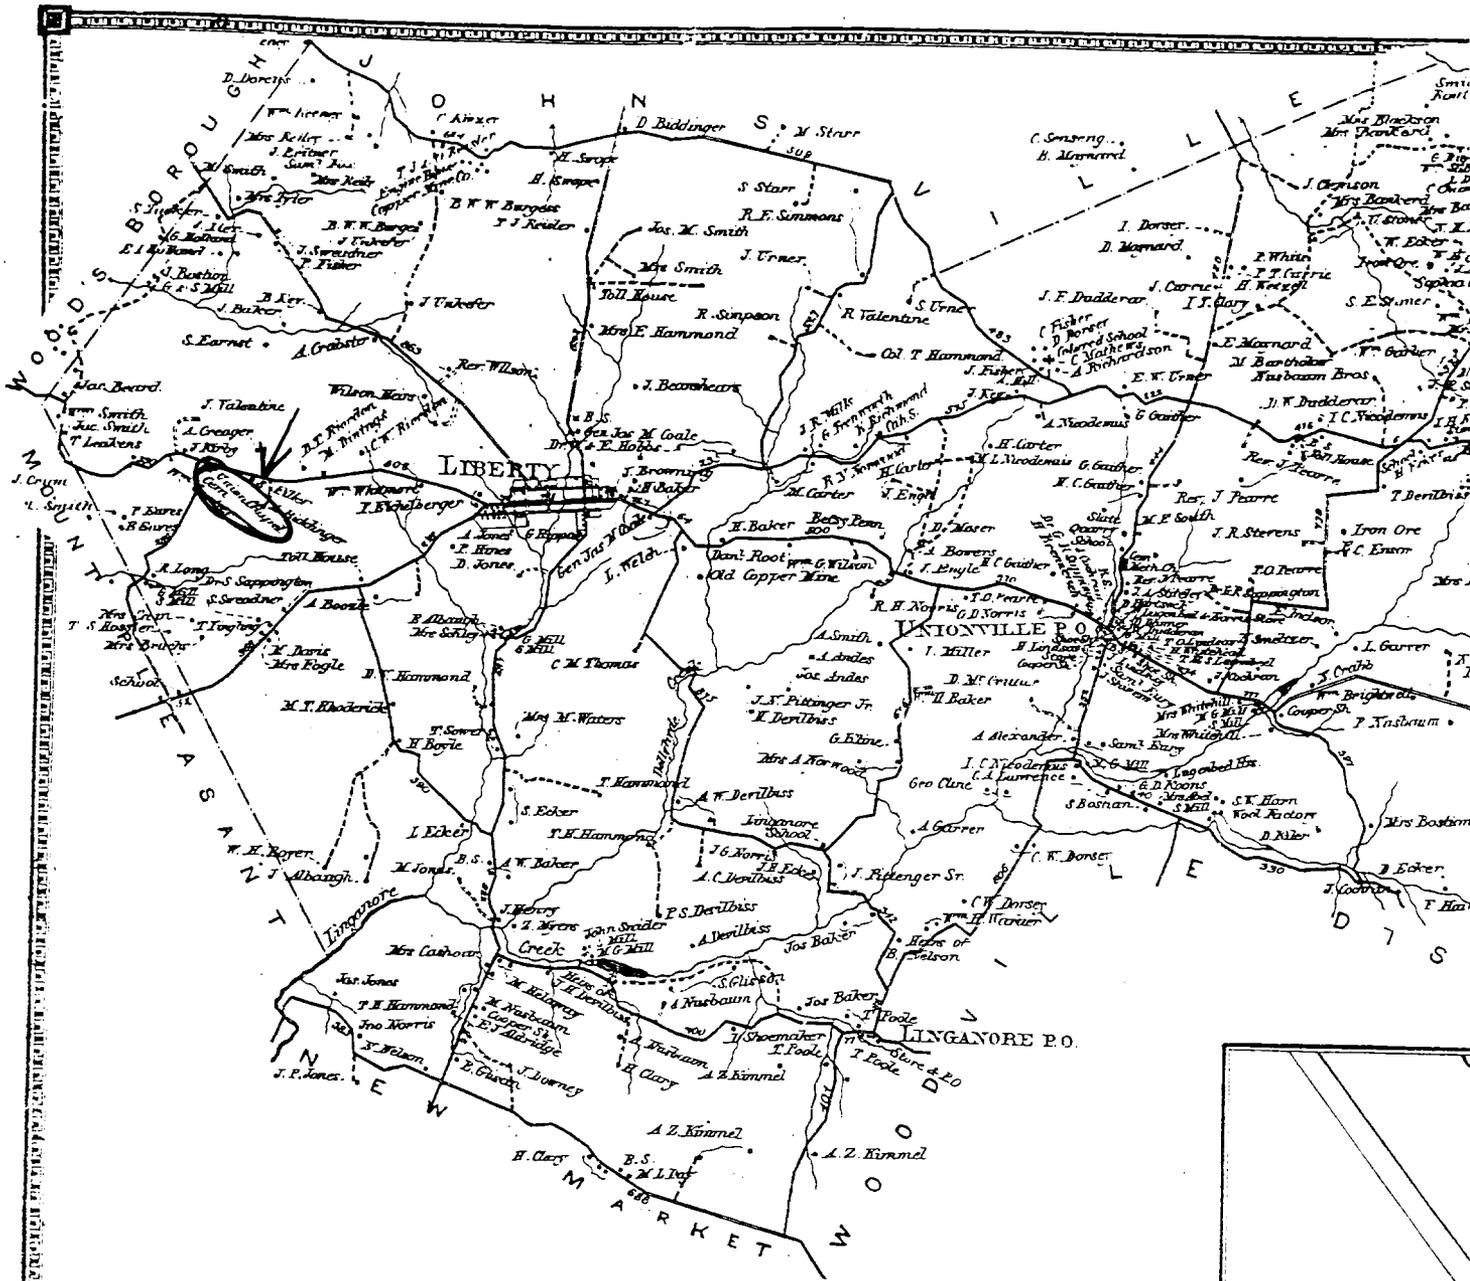

The entrance to the church is through double paneled doors in the tower base under a 4-light transom. Above the entrance is a semi-circular window with the inscription in stained glass: Union Lutheran Church, Libertytown, Maryland. The east and west sides of the bell tower have rectangular windows with early 20th century stained glass. The side elevations of the church have 4 bays each with stained glass windows. The belfry of the tower has arched openings and a hipped composition roof. A datestone in the northeast corner is inscribed 1963 and 1936. The south elevation has both interior and exterior chimney stacks.

The 7-course American bond brick exterior has been sandblasted and repointed. A photo of about 1976 in the foyer shows that the building had been painted a light color. Gutters conceal a corbeled dogtooth cornice. Two stained glass windows on the east elevation were damaged by a lightning strike on May 1, 1991, breaking some glass and tracery. The interior of the church is much altered in finish and fixtures. Plain painted plaster walls and ceiling. Pews, flooring, and altar furniture are recent replacements. The original rear wall of the church was removed when a choir was added in the 1954 alteration. The datestone indicates some work took place in 1936, but its nature is unknown at the time of this survey. The cemetery south of the church contains early slate headstones with German inscriptions. Civil War period soldiers' graves are also included.

8.1 Significance

Union Chapel is a good representative of the common practice in the first three quarters of the 19th century of Lutheran and Reformed congregations using the same buildings for worship. Other "Union" churches are found throughout the county, although most, like Union Chapel, dropped the name when the Reformed congregations built their own churches. Architecturally, the church is a good example of rural churches in the mid-19th century when belfrys and steeples became common additions to the basic hall plan. Similar examples are Rocky Hill Church (F-8-88), Ca. 1882; and Oak Hill Church of God (F-8-99; Oak Hill Survey District), Ca. 1840's.

Union Chapel was used jointly by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations into the early 20th century. Further research should be done on the history as well as building activities.
