DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This house is located far off the public road, Thomas Run Road, and shares a lane with Medical Hall. The house faces east. The two story house consists of two sections.

Section 1 is uncoursed rubble stone and is actually two different sections built at two separate times. The original house was a small, almost square structure, 2 bays by 2. It included the south end of this section. This was extended to make the house 5 bays by 2. There are three corbeled brick chimneys in this section; one on each of the inside gable ends and one almost in the center of the gable flank roof. The roof has box cornices. There are three doors on the east side. These are located in the first, third, and fifth bays. The center door is very wide and has six moulded panels. Windows are 6 lights over 6 and have louvered shutters. Flat brick arches are above all first floor windows and doors on this section. A five bay, hip roofed porch is located on the east side. It is one story high and has stone foundations. There are five pedestaled, square columns with chamfered edges. The porch has wooden steps. The rafter ends are visible on the eaves of the porch roof.

A cellar is located beneath this entire section. Entrance is gained through a storm cellar door located on the north east corner of the north side. On the south east corner of the south side is a slight well revealing a cellar window having a semi-elliptical brick arch.

Inside, the plastered walls are almost 24 inches thick and walls around window openings are rounded. The fireplace on the north wall of the south room is brick with a plain wood mantle piece with little ornamentation. Floors are replaced and ceilings are very low (7 feet). A staircase in the center of the section is inclosed and has a built in closet in each of the flanking rooms. Originally, the small, square house, now the south room of the stone structure, probably had no stairway. A ladder was probably used to reach the second story.

The frame section is 3 bays by 1. It is two stories high. The foundations are probably stuccoed brick. An entrance is located in the northeast bay of the north side as well as in the southeast bay of the south side. Windows are 6 lights over 6. A one bay entrance porch is located on the north side. It has a gable front roof and plain, pedestaled, rectangular columns. A shed roofed, screened in porch runs almost the length of the addition on the south side. It is built onto brick foundations and has three brick steps. Doors and windows in the frame addition have been re-arranged and this is apparent in the broken lines of the clapboard covering.

Inside, a narrow stairway is at the west wall. The owner thinks that this was added. He speculates that originally a ladder was used to gain entrance to the second floor and pointed out a specific break in the clapboard where an entrance had been boarded up at the south west corner of the south side. Mr. Harlan also said that the frame section was constructed approximately 100 years ago.

A smoke house to the west of the frame addition has a gable front, slate covered roof. The eaves are wide. The first elevation is rubble stone and the second is frame. There are no windows and the door is located in the center of the east wall. The large wood plank door has 2 iron strap hinges.

A privy is located south west of the house. It is a one story, square, rubble stone structure. It has a wood shingle hip roof. There is one small window on the south side and a wood plank door in the center of the east facade. The door has two iron strap hinges. The sitting board has been removed, but Mr. Harlan said that it was either a three or four seat privy.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

It is difficult to pinpoint the construction date of this stone dwelling. The 1783 Maryland Tax Assessment failed to list houses. Mary Flanagan is shown as the owner at that time, owning 200 acres of the Out Quarter, worth $150. By the time of the 1798 Federal Tax Assessment, the property had fallen into the hands of Dr. John Archer, an extensive land holder in this Hundred, as well as in the County. It is difficult, then to separate much of his property into the various tracts of land. A tenant dwelling in this hundred is listed, however, and its value is assessed at $55. No mention is made of its construction. During the 1814 Tax Assesment, Archer Hays, the new owner of the Out Quarter as well as several other tracts of land, was in the process of building a two story, 30 feet by 22 feet dwelling. Also present at that time was a 16 feet by 32 feet kitchen, a stone and frame barn, a stone meat house, spring house, and a 30 feet by 16 feet, stone slave "Quarter." The deed conveying this land, metions that this is the same property "Upon which Edward Flanagan lived." It cannot be determined whether or not the Flanagan dwelling was incorporated into the new house Hays built. The kitchen, as well as the slave quarter, listed in 1814, comes very close in size to the unusual stone structure near the dwelling at the present time. This structure appears to have been designed for various uses.

The house itself has many Georgian influences but is basically a vernacular house built to suit an individual's needs.

In 1844, Jacob Ott Livezey purchased the house and property from Nathaniel W.S. Hays. The Livezey family had migrated to Harford County earlier that same year, along with several other Quaker families from Lower Dublin Township in Philadelphia County. Jacob was married to Priscilla Waterman, whose family had also migrated to this County that year. The Waterman family is descended from Captain Humphrey of Barbados, who settle in Abingdon Township, Philadelphia (late Montgomery) County, Pennsylvania, at the end of the 17th century. Jacob Livezey assisted in the construction of his brother-in-law's Joseph P. Waterman's house (HA-1062).

During the Civil War, Mr. Livezey paid for substitutes to take his sons places in that war. His unmarried daughter, Prescilla, was a correspondant of John Wilkes Booth. When she died, however, the embarrassed family destroyed all of these letters. A photograph of John Wilkes Booth does remain in the Livezey family album.

The Livezey family earned their living as truck farmers and ran a way side inn, for a time, at the Waterman's home (HA-1062).

Many members of the family are buried in the Little Falls Friends Meeting burial ground. er, members of this family were active in the Walters Methodist Meeting House-Thomas Run Church.

To the north of the house is a large, two story, uncoursed rubble stone building, 3 bays by 1. It has a gable flank, tin covered roof with wide eaves. Large, plain quoins are at each corner of the stone structure. Stone lintels are above each window. There is an entrance on the east facade. It is of plain wood plank and is located on the north east bay. Windows are 6 lights over 6. On the south gable end are large, double hung, wood plank doors with large iron strap hinges. These doors were used as a carriage entrance, and have a large, semi-elliptical brick arch above them. A corbeled brick chimney is located at the north inside gable end. This services a large, stone, cooking fireplace. Attic windows at each gable end are 6 lights over 6 and on the north they flank the chimney.

Inside, this building is presently used for storage, though the owner would like to make it suitable as a dwelling. Upstairs, the wood floors reveal where large, round barrels or kegs had been stored. Mr. Harlan mentioned that he had been told that the building was, at one time, used as a pear brandy "factory." He pointed out many old pear trees and told me that the family that had lived there at one time made and sold pear brandy from their trees. Carriages and wagons would come to the farm and pick up this product.
