Windy Knoll is located on Hollingsworth Road in Joppa. The rubble stone structure is two stories high and faces south.

This house has a gable flank roof which is covered with tin. The roof has a box cornice. A corbeled stone chimney is located at the east gable end, flush with the wall. A one-tier porch is located on the principle facade.

Windows are six lights over six upstairs, one over one down. The center door is unremarkable.

The three bay dwelling originally had no windows on either the east or west ends. The present owners have had a window put into the west facade. A large frame addition has been added to the North.

A fireplace on the first elevation has been closed up. It had been used for cooking. The stair winds around the flue.

There is a cellar beneath the original stone unit.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

A plat of Bynum Run by Thomas White, dated 1728, shows "Claget's Forest" existed at that time. The date it was patented and the name of the patentee are not given, however.

This tract is generally associated with the Hollingsworth family who owned, and at one time, approximately 1,000 acres of Claggett's Forest. This small, stone structure is said to have been Nathaniel and Abigal's home while they waited for the large house just north of this dwelling to be built.

A plat prepared in 1859 by G.G. Curtiss outlines the property owned by Miss Abigal Hollingsworth and shows the location of structures. The tract is called Claggett's Forest on this plat map.

The Hollingsworth family ran a wheel factory for many years on Winter's Run near what is now Atkisson Dam. The Company, J.C. Hollingsworth and Sons Company, also owned a gristmill at the same site. The factory was at first run by water power but later a steam engine was installed.

The factory was destroyed by fire near the turn of the century.
