Private

The Stump House at Indian Spring Farm is an unusual example of the evolution of early buildings over a long period of time. Its original section is a good example of a stone residence, common in Harford County in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Its subsequent additions are notable for their sympathetic design, scale, and materials in harmony with the old section. As the majority of houses of this period were altered, the additions often were frame and in an entirely different scale. The Stump House is thus somewhat rare in Harford County.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Stump House is a rambling five-sectioned stone house built from the early 19th century through the second quarter of the 20th century and located on Indian Spring Farm, a large agricultural property north and east of Deer Creek and west of Priestford Road (Md. Rt. 136) in Harford County, Maryland. The present orientation of the house is toward the east; the original section's main elevation faced south.

The original section of the house is a two-story coursed rubble stone building with a gable roof and a three-bay main elevation. (Refer to plan.) The central entrance has a rectangular transom and sidelights. The present door, partially glazed, is undoubtedly a modern replacement of the original. The double hung windows in this section have six over six lights. The interior end chimneys are flanked by two bays and elongated attic windows. Each window has louvred shutters. The roof is slate.

The present main section of the house is a two-story stone rectangular building adjoining the north side of the original section at right angles. The east elevation is irregularly divided, with three entrances and different fenestration patterns on both floors. There are two interior chimneys on the east side in this section. The west elevation also is irregular in the arrangement of bays. This facade has three groupings of windows and doors, with the focal point being a double doorway with a brick arch and plaster infill in the southern grouping. The fenestration is eight over eight sliding sash with louvred shutters at some windows. The roof is slate, as on all sections of the house.

The main section is joined on the north by two one-story stone additions, one containing a music room with large arched windows and french doors and a small library in the other addition. Both sections have interior chimneys on the north side. These additions were made in the early 20th century.

The fifth section is a rectangular two-story garage and kitchen wing with servants' quarters on the second floor. The wing adjoins the original section on the east. The exterior of this wing is covered in clapboard.

A formal garden adjoins the house on the north and east with a rubble stone wall and varying levels reached via flagstone steps. The wall has a round porthole opening and an arched passage at its north east end. The wall continues along the east edge of the lawn in front of the house to form an entrance gate at the driveway.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Stump House at Indian Spring Farm is an unusual example of the evolution of early buildings over a long period of time. Its original section is a good example of a stone residence, common in Harford County in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Its subsequent additions are notable for their sympathetic design, scale, and materials in harmony with the old section. As the majority of houses of this period were altered, the additions often were frame and in an entirely different scale. The Stump House is thus somewhat rare in Harford County.

HISTORY AND SUPPORT

Local tradition states that in 1781, Angus Greme and Captain Gimat, officers under General Lafayette in the Revolution, admired the view of the Deer Creek Valley from the hill where Trappe Church now stands and determined to return to Harford County after the war to settle with their families. Captain Greme did return to the area and is said to have owned what is now Indian Spring Farm. Walter Preston in his History of Harford County (1901) states the farm owned by Greme was on Thomas Run south of Deer Creek (p. 143). Greme is buried at Trappe Church just north of Indian Spring Farm.

The title search for the Janney Mansion (HA-341) reveals that part of the Indian Spring property was owned by the Nottingham Forge Company in the early 18th century. The forge was on the north bank of the Deer Creek, about one mile upstream from Priestford, where the present MD. Rt. 136 crosses the creek. The site was later used by Husband's Flint Mill. (See Molinography of Harford County, John McGrain.)

John Stump began acquiring land in this vicinity about 1802 and in 1812 patented Stump's Prospect. The original section of the house may date from this period. The exact date of construction and the relationship with the Janney Mansion (HA-341) is unknown and deserves further research. John H. Janney and his heirs owned the farm from about 1878 to 1897. The name Indian Spring Farm apparently originated with the Janney ownership. In the mid-1920's, the Symington family acquired the farm and made the bulk of the additions to the house and added the formal garden.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The extreme northwestern section of this building is the oldest portion of the house, although the rest of the complex has been carefully designed and constructed to blend in with the flavor of the original architecture. The building is two stories in height and composed of coursed rubble stone with quoined corners. Stone lintels are mortared into the facades above each door or window. The building is three bays across and one deep, with the western side considered to be the original front. The windows are 6 X 6's in new frames. Three cellar windows are on the northern side of the western door, while one of the same configuration lies on the southern side. There are attic windows on either side of the chimney on the northern and southern gable extremes. There were probably other doors at one time, but only the western entrance survives today, decorated with a six-light transom and four-pane sidelights. The roof is gable-flank and slate-covered, trimmed with a box cornice. A replaced outside-end stone chimney is on the northern extreme. It is extremely thick as it tapers halfway up. This tapering is marked with a layer of running bond brick. A stone flush-end flue is on the southern extreme. The single entrance has before it stone and slate slab steps.

The Interior

Some of the features have been altered to accommodate the construction of the adjacent building. One interesting aspect is the double set of staircases that connect the main house to the older part. The regular circular stairway has a door on a middle landing connecting the front stairs with a parallel hidden servants' stairs. The first floor has chair rails, wainscotting, shoe molding and ceiling cornices. There are three fireplaces, one on each level, along the southern wall. The windows are inset.

SPECIFIC DATES

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Before English settlement, Indian Springs was a preferred campsite by local Indians. In 1783, Count Rochambeau's army briefly bivouacked there. The property was originally the site of a furnace, on land condemned in 1719 by the Nottingham Company. The company possessed the tract until 1781 when the 1780 Act allowing for the confiscation of former British property brought it into the hands of Josiah Lee. The 1783 Tax List shows Lee as having 6 acres of Maiden's Choice, 200 acres of Pkanter's Paradise and 10 acres of Free-lands Mount. The 1798 Tax List shows Lee as owning an 18 X 33 single-story frame home, with a wooden kitchen, shed, henhouse, outhouse and stable structures. John Stump acquired these and neighbouring tracts in the first decade of the Nineteenth Century, and his descendants kept the parcels until 1862. The oldest portion of the house was probably a tenant dwelling for the farm, when the Janney mansion (see HA-341) was kingpin of the estate. It could possibly predate 1800 but this is difficult to verify. The crest of the house was built by Donald and Charles J. Symington, relatives of Missouri senator Stuart Symington, in the 1930's. The original house served as a tenant dwelling, the 1878 Martenet depicting James Silver as the occupant.

Davis, 1982

Agreed and released in
 The name of Benjamin Silverberg. That of Indian Springs was impugned and the course was to be called at a certain point the line of the road, such from the adjacent road, and was indicated by lines. The probable course of the road, creek and bridge, which had been, was indicated by broken lines.
