The Boarman House is important for its log structure both because log buildings surviving from the 19th century are uncommon and because stone and frame houses were more common in the Deer Creek area during the mid-19th century. The house appears on Martenet's 1878 map as that of F. Boarman.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Boarman House is a two-story log and frame house with a shed porch and shingled exterior built about 1865 just south of the intersection of Boyd and Scarboro Roads near Scarboro, Harford County, Maryland. The main elevation faces north.

The north elevation has three bays on the ground floor and two on the second floor. The entrance is in the center bay. The porch has chamfered posts and a plain balustrade. The slate roof has a box cornice and an interior end chimney projects from the roof at the east gable end. Also on the east is a bulkhead cellar entrance. At the west gable end on the ground floor is a projecting bay with paired windows. This bay was added by the current owner after 1942. The main section is believed to have a log structure, with the original floor plan being one room on the first floor and two rooms on the second.

At the rear of the house is a two story wing with a shed metal roof sloping toward the west. A shed-roofed frame addition with aluminum siding and a composition roof is attached to the west side of the wing. On the east side of the wing is an enclosed porch with german siding.

The exterior of the house is covered with wood shingles, including the box cornice on the north elevation. The foundation is stone.

A frame and stone barn formerly stood about 50 yards northwest of the house. It burned in about 1978 and the stone and concrete block foundation remains standing.
