RED HOUSE TAVERN

Cooksville

eighteenth century

Private

The Red House Tavern was originally the mid way stopping point for travelers between Frederick and Baltimore, twenty-three miles to Baltimore and twenty-four to Frederick. It is located along an abandoned stretch of the Old Frederick Road and is said to be the birthplace of Thomas Cook after whom Cooksville was named. It is a 1½ story stone house, three bays wide and two deep whose most distinguished architectural feature is its high pitched gable roof with dormers and a wide central chimney inset into the south wall. An additional one and a half story frame north wing lies on its north wall. The building faces east with a central doorway flanked by double-hung windows with original sashes held by wooden pegs.

Ferdinand M. Bayard, a French writer, visited here in 1791 and the Reverend Isaac Van Bibber, noted clergyman in 1844. Presently occupied as a residence, it is hoped that it will survive any planned future development in the area.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
The Red House Tavern is located some 200 feet from the northwest intersection of Routes 97 and 70 on the west side of Route 97. Its high pitched gable roof running north-south and holding dormer windows lends a peculiar charm to this otherwise simple stone structure. The house has been constructed in two sections which rest on stone foundations. The original south wing has been constructed of coarse stone, one and a half stories high, three bays wide and two bays deep, while the newer frame north wing is two bays wide, two bays deep and one and one half stories high housing the present kitchen. The east elevation of the original wing holds a simple rectangular front entrance approached by 3 steps and flanked by rectangular double-hung first floor windows with original sashes held by wooden pegs. The original six-over-six lites are now 3/6 and 6/6 on this wall. These presently need to be restored. The windows are decorated with flat wooden lintels and projecting flat wooden sills. The south elevation of the original wing is the most pleasing with its deeply set widely spaced first and second floor windows and wide central chimney which enhance the width of the second floor A-shaped south wall. Five dormer windows are set into the gabled roof of both wings, both of which run north-south; two are placed on the east elevation of the stone house, two on its west and one on the west elevation of the frame addition. The dormers of the original stone wing hold rectangular double-hung windows with four-over-four lites. Pilasters are applied on each side. The dormer of the addition hold an eight lite casement window. A square brick chimney is placed west of center on the north wall of the south wing. The first floor windows of the original structure are all double-hung and originally held six-over-six lites. Presently they hold varied lites as the repair of the window glass and replacement has been dictated by what remained of the original sash. The north facade of the original structure holds second floor double-hung windows with six-over-six lites and a basement casement window with four-four lites, decorated with 2-2 vertical lites. The north wall of the north wing holds two double-hung first floor windows (now 2 over 2 on the east bay). Its south wall holds a six-over-six basement window. The interior plan of the house has been altered. Originally, the kitchen was located in the basement, beneath the living room which at one time held three rooms. The north wing now accommodates a basement kitchen and is approached by four descending stone steps to a rectangular entrance door, with the dining room now located where the original kitchen functioned. Basement windows with iron bars on the east wall of the original structure were located under the two first floor windows. As this was used as a kitchen, the bars prevented pilfering of food. This arrangement is found in Athol, too and appears to have been a common practice in the early houses. A chimney vase in the west bay of the north wall of the present dining room and original kitchen does not function. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Red House Tavern is significant both architecturally and historically.

Architecturally it is representative of the fine stone houses which dot the Howard County countryside. Built with a high pitched gable roof which accommodated a second floor but was taxed for one, its south elevation gives a peculiarly pleasing effect.

A frame north wing has been added at a later date which in no way deprives the building of its original profile from the south.

Considered one of the oldest landmarks and best known taverns, it is located on an abandoned stretch of the Old Frederick Road and served as the midway stopping point between Baltimore and Frederick for travelers. Notable visitors included Ferdinand M. Bayard, a French writer who journeyed through Maryland and Virginia in the summer of 1791. George Washington is reputed to have spent a night here and in 1844 the Reverend Isaac Van Bibber, noted Episcopal clergyman, spent some time here.

From Bayard's book, Travels of a Frenchman in Maryland and Virginia we get a date of 1791. It is reputed to be much earlier and to have been the birthplace of Thomas Cook, after whom Cooksville was named.

Red House Tavern - Description (Continued)

The large south chimney serves two fireplaces which come to a V and indicate this area of the room was divided into two rooms while a third fireplace in the northwest corner served a third room.

A log house with gabled roof lies southwest of the structure with a barn still further west. The Old Frederick Road is now a driveway from Route 97 running along the south side of the house and its out buildings. Presently used as a home for Mr. Roy Stevens and his family, it remains as a vantage of what was once a tavern and inn on a well-traveled road.
