THE LISBON FEMALE SCHOOL
Lisbon
Private

Circa 1832

The Lisbon Female School faces south on the north side of Route 144, just east of the present Lisbon Post Office. It is a three bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running east-west), brick (laid in Flemish bond and English garden Wall brick bond) structure, with wide brick chimneys centered into its east and west walls and a two story high frame addition off its north wall. It features an open bible and cross paneled, rectangular, south entrance door surmounted by a four light transom and stretcher brick flat arched lintel, as well as proportionally scaled and vertically aligned fenestration. Its second floor windows on the south elevation have flat arched stretcher brick lintels decorated with key stones.

In 1860 the building was most notable as the Lisbon Female School whose owner and head mistress was Miss Heckrotte.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Lisbon Female School faces south on the north side of Route 144 just east of the present Lisbon post office. It is a three bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running east-west) brick (laid in Flemish bond on the south facade and English garden wall brick bond on all other walls) structure laid on a stone foundation with wide brick chimneys inset into its east and west walls.

Its central rectangular paneled south entrance door is surmounted by a four light transom and flat arched stretcher brick lintel and flanked by rectangular double hung windows decorated with wooden sills, flat arched stretcher brick lintels and green shutters (now closed.) Above rest three second floor, vertically aligned and proportionally scaled, rectangular, double hung windows holding two-over-two lights, whose flat arched brick lintels are decorated with keystones. Basement vents are located beneath the first floor windows. That on the west is decorated with a flat arched brick lintel, that on the left is surmounted by an interesting roman arched brick lintel composed of two header brick courses, which may have been the location for the original basement door.

The west elevation holds no apertures while the east elevation holds a rectangular entrance on the south side and two square four light casement windows. Originally a toll house was attached to this side of the house whose gabled roof line is still in evidence.

The north elevation holds a first and second floor rectangular window in the east bay which are vertically aligned and proportionally scaled. The first floor window holds nine-over-six lights and the second floor two-over-two lights. Along the remainder of the north wall extends a three bay wide, one room deep, two story high frame addition with wide brick chimney centered into its north wall, the latter of which holds a single square four light casement window.

The interior of the building features random width pine floors and late eighteenth or early nineteenth century unmitred wood work around the door frames of the central south entrance and some interior doors composed of simple flat lintels supported by flat pilasters.

The east room of the brick house holds a fine federal mantle-piece flanked by pilasters whose frieze is decorated with a central oval medallion. North of this central mantle piece is a fine roman arched cupboard decorated with a roman arched wooden lintel with keystone, flanked by fluted pilasters and featuring rectangular paneled double doors. The room also features an old chair rail while the west room of the brick house holds another central mantle piece and chair rail. Beaded batten wood doors are found throughout the house.

The second floor of the brick house holds two bedrooms and a central attic staircase, with mantlepice in the east room.

In the attic we find the east brick chimney was narrowed and the west chimney increased to match one another in exterior width. Wide floor boards featuring tongue-and-grove construction are also found in the attic along with large log joists put together with wooden peg construction.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Lisbon Female School is significant historically, architecturally and in the field of education.

Architecturally it is significant as one of five brick houses in the village of Lisbon, all of which are located on the north side of Route 144.

It features flemish bond brick on its south facade, wide matching brick chimneys inset into its east and west walls, a central rectangular entrance, surmounted by a four light transom, and proportionally scaled and vertically aligned fenestration. Key stones are featured on the second floor windows of the south facade.

This brick building and that on the northeast corner of Route 144 and Woodbine Road, known as the Old Lisbon Hotel, are very similar in treatment and have both had additions. The Female School has a north wing and at one time an east wing as does the Lisbon Hotel. The construction of the brick chimneys in the attic is noteworthy. One has been widened and another narrowed to appear equal on the exterior. This also occurs in the Presbyterian Manse, circa 1832. It is believed that the two buildings were constructed at about the same time, by the same builder.

Historically it is significant as the Lisbon Female School whose head mistress, Miss Margaret Hekrotte was its founder. It is reputed to have served in this capacity for some thirty years. The 1860 Martenet Map of Lisbon indicated it as the Female School and the 1878 Hopkin's Atlas as the property of Miss Heckrotte who was its head mistress. Later, not only young women but young men were educated here.

Its significance in the field of education as well as architecture and history is reputed to have been extensive. As many as three generations of women in some of the local families were educated here and were said to have been well trained by the time of their departure.

Today this building stands vacant. Its east wing no longer exists and its north wing is slipping away from the north wall of the brick house. One of Lisbon's most noteworthy buildings, it is hoped that it will be restored by its present owner or sold to someone who will appreciate its heritage and strive to rehabilitate it. Due to its delapidated condition and its close proximity to Route 144, it should be placed, along with the village of Lisbon, in a National Historic Landmark District and recommended for inclusion to the State Critical Areas Program.
