Description of Property and Eligibility Determination: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

This rural commercial structure is located on the northeast corner of Daisy and Union Chapel Roads, Howard County. Considered the earliest structure around which the town of Daisy was formed, it was constructed late in the last quarter of the nineteenth century. (Previous Survey information dates it to circa 1898.) Originally constructed to serve as a country store/market on the ground level; the second floor served as social hall and gathering place for community members.

The principal structure is a large two and one-half story frame building with a moderate sloping gabled roof. Most of the original materials are extant. They include: metal roof, wood clapboard siding (Aluminum siding described in previous survey information has been removed.), and stone foundations. Most original wood windows, (six over six double hung sash), remain in place. (Several of windows on the west facing façade, at the second floor level, have been replaced with one over one double hung, aluminum sash.) Original doors and screen doors seem to be extant. The centrally located attic window at the gable end, is a more decorative two over two, double hung sash in wood and remains in fair condition. The historic signage is now missing. There are ghosts of the markings: "Daisy Trading Post" along the front and westward side façades.

The shed additions cited and described in the existing survey form are extant. Generally the condition of the property has deteriorated in recent years but it seems stable and its vernacular architectural integrity is still very much intact.

Circa 1898

The Daisy Trading Post faces south on the northeast corner of Daisy and Union Chapel Roads. It is a three bay wide, three bay deep, two story high, gable roof (running north-south), frame clapboard (covered with aluminum siding) building, resting on a stone foundation, with one room on each floor and a central, square brick chimney on the north wall. The double rectangular entrance is in the south end wall, sheltered by a two story high, shed roof, open porch, held by three iron posts and one wooden post, with a large sign across the first floor reading, "Daisy Trading Post", and a smaller sign on the second floor reading, "Antiques." A one story high, shed roofed, frame addition rests along the east and west walls of the building, adding space for storage on the west, while a former truck and wagon garage on the east is now used for acid baths for stripping old paint from "antiques." A further, two story high, shed roofed addition runs along the north wall. Windows are rectangular with double hung sashes, holding six-over-six lights, except for the attic window in the gable end wall, which is a Roman arched, double-hung window, holding two-over-two lights.

The Daisy Trading Post at Daisy, Howard County, Maryland is the earliest commercial building standing at this cross roads intersection, known as Daisy, which, by its construction, was responsible for the development of Daisy as a community. Distinction attaching from age is expanded upon by its construction for use as a store, which served as a social focal point in the community, providing a community hall on its second floor, and a meeting place for the neighborhood. Additionally, the pattern of enlargement by increments over a period of time is significant for two reasons: It reflects a common practice in the building history of the United States, and it mirrors the evolution of this particular community from the late nineteenth century to today.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Daisy Trading Post at Daisy, Howard County, Maryland, is the earliest commercial building standing at this cross roads intersection, known as Daisy, which, by its construction, was responsible for the development of Daisy as a community.¹ Distinction attaching from age is expanded upon by its construction for use as a store, which served as a social focal point in the community, providing a community hall on its second floor, and a meeting place for the neighborhood.² Additionally, the pattern of enlargement by increments over a period of time is significant for two reasons: it reflects a common practice in the building history of the United States,³ and it mirrors the evolution of this particular community from the late nineteenth century to today.⁴

History and Support

1. Daisy did not come into being until after 1898. The 1878 Hopkins Atlas indicates no community of Daisy at the crossroads of Union Chapel Road and Daisy Road, but a farm of 92 acres owned by W. T. Silance. He and Richard Dorsey sold one acre of land for $40.00 to John W. Ward and nine years later thirty (30) square perches of land for $7.50. It is believed that John Ward constructed the Daisy Trading Post, named after Daisy Johnson, who was the sister of U. S. Senator Gorman of Howard County. It is believed that the front of the house was also constructed at that time with later additions made in 1893 when the 30 square perches of additional, undeveloped land were acquired by Mr. John W. Ward. On September 1, 1898 Mr. John W. Ward and his wife, Sarah, sold the general store to George W. Ward for $1,750. It changed hands four times between 1898 and 1919 until it was finally acquired by Norman Mullinix, son of A. E. Mullinix, for whom A. E. Mullinix Road was named. Norman Mullinix operated the Daisy Trading Post successfully for fifty years. Initially a general store which sold fresh produce, yard goods, shoes and hardware, it was expanded to also furnish seed and fertilizer from Southern States.

2. It is not only important as a General Store but also as a social focal point for this section of Howard County. On Saturday nights six or seven clerks were needed to man the store, while parking places were difficult to find. Daisy, which consisted of a school and the Trading Post bustled with activity with the General Store serving not only the commercial needs of the community, but as its meeting place as well. With the formation of the International Order of Good Templers, which later became known as the I.O.O.F., the second floor was used as a social hall until 1915, when The Daisy I.O.O.F. building across the street was constructed.

3. The pattern of its enlargement by increments over a period of time is significant. The successful growth of a business, sale to a person who sought to enlarge the business, use as a social hall, and changes in the commercial use of the building are all among the reasons for the alteration and extension of existing buildings. It has been a common practice to add rooms, construct shed roofed lean toos and then to enclose them. the Daisy Trading Post typifies this practice, with frame additions. Initially it was only a one room store with hall above. Circa 1920 the shed roofed area at the end of the building was constructed to provide additional space for seed and fertilizer. Later a shed on the east side of the building was constructed as a garage for the owner's trucks and today this has been enclosed to provide an area for stripping paint from old furniture. The south facade, with all this, remains relatively unchanged, maintaining its original door and window placement.

4. John W. Ward held land in the Daisy area. As the builder of the Daisy Trading Post, he chartered a course from a rural farm economy to the growing importance of town life. The Ward family helped establish a true town center in this community by constructing first the Daisy Trading Post and later in 1915 selling .306 acres of land for $150.00 for the construciton of the I.O.O.F. Building. A school was also constructed around this time. In 1919 Norman Mullinix acquired the property and with his brother A. Robey Mullinix developed the area still further, when in 1924 they began the operation of Mullinix Motors, located on the northwest corner of Daisy Road and Ed Warfield Road. The house next to the Daisy Trading Post was used as a residence for Norman Mullinix until 1969. Originally the school house, which now houses the Eyre Bus Service, lay east, with the I.O.O.F. building across the street. As today's zoned commercial use in the middle of a rural area, and as a property which has just acquired new ownership, the Daisy Trading Post will once again be pressed into providing the needed commercial services for this area.
