Locust Grove
Cooksville
Private

circa 1840

Locust Grove, commonly known as the David Clark House, faces south on the east side of Hood's Mill Road, north of its intersection with Old Frederick Road. It is a three bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, gabled roof (running east-west) stone house, resting on a stone foundation, with wide brick chimneys inset into its east and west walls, and two gabled roof dormer windows on its south facade. A two bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, intersecting gable roof (running north-south) frame (covered with aluminum siding) kitchen wing, constructed in 1908 and resting on a stone foundation, runs along the central and east bay of the north elevation.

The Stone house features a central, rectangular, double cross, paneled, south entrance door, surmounted by a four light transom, flanked by single, rectangular, double-hung windows, holding six-over-one lights, underlined by projecting stone sills, surmounted by flat stone lintels, and decorated with shutters. Fenestration is vertically aligned and proportionally scaled, with three, similar second floor windows, holding six-over-six lights. The two gabled roof dormers hold large, rectangular, two-two light casement windows, surmounted by pediments, faced with fish scale shingles.

Fine stonework is evident in the stone quoining, the flat stone lintels and projecting stone sills of the house.

A one story high, hipped roof, open porch runs along the central and west bay of the south elevation, as well as along the entire west elevation. It is held by eight, turned, wooden posts and two similar half posts. A wooden railing, with square spindles, runs along the perimeter of its landing. Three wooden steps lead to the south entrance, with another series of wooden steps on the north and west elevations of the porch.

Locust Grove stands on land once a part of "Shipley's Discovery" a two hundred and fifty acre tract of land patented by Robert Shipley in 1724.

By 1806 John Barnes had acquired 175 acres of this patent and constructed a modest log house here, close to Hoods Mills Road. It is believed that his sons constructed the present house in the late 1820's or early 1830's.

Henry Forsyth, who lived at "Pleasant Valley" on the Sykesville Road bought the property and conveyed a hundred and thirty acres to his son, Arthur P. Forsyth, who with his wife, Amanda Clark made his home here for many years. The house is now owned by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Terry, III. who enhance the integrity of this fine stone building through their sensitive care and good taste.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Locust Grove, commonly known as the David Clark House, faces south on the east side of Hood's Mill Road, north of its intersection with Old Frederick Road. It is a three bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, gabled roof (running east-west) stone house, resting on a stone foundation, with wide brick chimneys inset into its east and west walls, and two gabled roof dormer windows on its south facade. A two bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, intersecting gable roof (running north-south) frame (covered with aluminum siding) kitchen wing, constructed in 1908 and resting on a stone foundation, runs along the central and east bay of the north elevation.

THE SOUTH ELEVATION

The Stone house features a central, rectangular, double cross, paneled, south entrance door, surmounted by a four light transom, flanked by single, rectangular, double-hung windows, holding six-over-one lights, underlined by projecting stone sills, surmounted by flat stone lintels, and decorated with shutters. Fenestration is vertically aligned and proportionally scaled, with three, similar second floor windows, holding six-over-six lights. The two gabled roof dormers hold large, rectangular, two-two light casement windows, surmounted by pediments, faced with fish scale shingles.

Fine stonework is evident in the stone quoining, the flat stone lintels and projecting stone sills of the house.

A one story high, hipped roof, open porch runs along the central and west bay of the south elevation, as well as along the entire west elevation. It is held by eight, turned, wooden posts and two similar half posts. A wooden railing, with square spindles, runs along the perimeter of its landing. Three wooden steps lead to the south entrance, with another series of wooden steps on the north and west elevations of the porch.

THE WEST ELEVATION OF THE STONE HOUSE

The west elevation of the stone house holds a rectangular, first floor, double-hung window, south of the central chimney, with no second floor apertures and two square, four light, double casement, attic windows.

THE EAST ELEVATION OF THE STONE HOUSE

The east elevation of the stone house holds a vertically aligned and proportionally scaled, first and second floor, rectangular, double-hung, window, holding six-over-six lights. Two attic windows, similar to those on the west elevation are also placed in this wall. A cellar door is placed on the south side of this wall.

THE NORTH ELEVATION

The west bay of the north elevation of the original stone house holds a first and second window, similar to those already described.

The central and east bay are taken by the two bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, intersecting gable (running north-south) kitchen wing, whose north elevation holds a double rectangular, first and second floor, vertically aligned, proportionally scaled, window, each component a double-hung window, holding two-over-two lights, separated by a flat pilaster, underlined by a flat wooden sill, and decorated with shutters. A rectangular, four light, casement, attic window is centered in the eave line of the gable.

THE WEST ELEVATION OF THE KITCHEN WING

This elevation features a central, six light, rectangular entrance door, flanked by shutters, and a small rectangular six-over-six light window south of the entrance. This section of the west wall was once a porch for it leads into a small vestibule, which holds a rectangular entrance and an original window opening, south of the entrance, which has been shuttered. A staircase, two-over-two light, rectangular, window rests on the north side of the central entrance. Two, similar, second floor windows punctuate this wall, while a gabled roof dormer window, similar to those on the south elevation of the stone section, is placed in the gable roof at this elevation.

THE EAST ELEVATION OF THE KITCHEN WING

The east elevation of the kitchen wing holds two second floor windows. Originally a kitchen entrance led on to a one story high, open porch which ran along this entire elevation. This has now been almost totally enclosed, leaving an overhang for the south entrance door and featuring a central, square, brick, exterior chimney, flanked by six-over-six light, rectangular windows. No windows occur on its north wall. Five wooden open steps lead to the nine light rectangular entrance door placed in its south wall.

INTERIOR

The interior of the stone house features a central hall and staircase, holding square spindles, original bannister and knewel post, off which is an east room or dining room and a west room or living room.

Wide random width floors, topnailed with square cut mails are found throughout the house, (those in the attic are some fourteen inches in width), with matching woodwork, composed of fluted pilasters and lintels, joined by square corners, decorated with circles, on both the first and second floors. Interior, open bible and cross paneled doors are found on the first and second floors, with beaded, batten wood doors, and old latches, found in the three rooms of the attic.

The living room or west room holds a wide, central, fireplace on its west wall, flanked by a flat wooden pilaster, on which rectangular molding is superimposed, surmounted by a deep, flat wooden architrave, similarly decorated. This decoration, as well as the mantle shelf, appear to be a latter addition to the mantelpiece. An interesting jib window, composed of a double-hung, rectangular window, holding six-over-one lights, under which rests an opening wooden panel, is placed on the south side of the central mantelpiece and opens on to the open porch on this west elevation.

The dining room or east room holds a wide, central, closed fireplace on its east wall, featuring a fine mantelpiece, whose lintels are decorated with half columns. A door on the west wall enters the 1908 kitchen wing. An east and south window light this room.

The second floor, west room features a closed fireplace, whose north and south side are occupied by closet space. A north and south window lights the room.

The second floor, east room features an open fireplace, centered on its east wall. The room is lighted by an east and south window and presently is used as an upstairs family room. Entry to the 1908 kitchen wing is located on its north wall.

The attic's central hall and two bedrooms feature very wide, fourteen inch floor boards and beaded, batten wood doors with latches.

The two gabled roof dormer windows, which light the east and west rooms of the attic were added in 1908.

A beaded batten wood door on the north wall of the east room enters into the 1908 kitchen wing. Two-thirds of this wing is taken up by a large bedroom, with a kitchen staircase and bath taking up the remainder of the floor space of this section of the house.

Auxiliary frame buildings are located east and northeast of the house.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Locust Grove is significant historically to Howard County and the State of Maryland for its association with the Shipley, Barnes and Forsyth families of Howard County.

On September 12, 1724, John Dorsey, Deputy Surveyor, stated in the Patent for "Shipley's Discovery" that he had laid out for Robert Shipley a parcel of land for two hundred and fifty acres, called Shipley's Discovery. By 1742 Robert Shipley had conveyed 140 acres to Nathan Barnes and in 1744, 110 acres to Peter Porter. (Please see "Chronology of Ownership").

By 1806 John Barnes had acquired 175 acres of Shipley's Discovery. (Please see "Chronology of Ownership"). The stone house is believed to have been built in the late 1820's or the early 1830's by his sons. During this period of the early nineteenth century many of the old stone houses in this area were constructed.

The period during and immediately after the War of 1812 was a general period of prosperity when, according to Mr. John McGrain, local historian for Baltimore County, Maryland, the early stone houses of Baltimore County were constructed. According to research undertaken by Mrs. Joetta Koppenhoefer on "Locust Grove", the tax records after 1840 do not show a new house, which was generally recorded when one was built. By 1852 a reference to a stone house was found on June 5, when Thomas borrowed from his brother John D. Barnes, $498, using his possessions as collateral, among which was "all crop of corn in ground on Stone House farm".

By 1856 the Forsyth family had acquired the stone house and 130 acres of land. The 1860 Martenet Map indicates Henry Forsyth as owner of this house and one very close to Hood's Mills Road, related to be of log, although he made his residence at "Lost by Neglect", known as "Pleasant Valley" on the Sykesville Road. Only two years later Henry conveyed this tract of land and part of Hobson's Choice to his son Arthur P. Forsyth, who made his home here and is noted as owner on the 1878 Hopkin's Atlas of the log house closer to Hoods Mills Road. The stone house is noted as the residence of P. H. Terhume and is believed to have been an error for the house was owned by Arthur P. Forsyth as late as 1921 when he deeded the property to his wife, Amanda Clark, whom he had married on November 24, 1870.

CONTINUE ON SEPARATE SHEET IF NECESSARY

It is possible that as a young married man, Arthur Forsyth chose to live in the more modest dwelling close to Hoods Mills Road and rent out the stone house to Mr. Terhune. This is, however, pure conjecture, for the stone house was the property of Arthur and Amanda Forsyth and was occupied by them for a long period of time. In 1908 extensive renovation was undertaken by them and the kitchen wing constructed. The house remained in the Forsyth family until 1930, when it became the property of the Hammonds.

Extensive family history for both the Barnes and the Forsyth families related to the history of the stone house, is found in a report on "Locust Grove", written by Mrs. Joetta Koppenhoefer in December, 1977.

Architecturally the stone house is significant to Howard County and the State as a fine example of Howard County Vernacular stone architecture. (Please see description for further details)

Historically and architecturally significant to Howard County and the State of Maryland, "Locust Grove" should be considered for inclusion to the National Register of Historic Places, the State Critical Areas Program and any local landmark ordinance which the citizens of Howard County may seek to initiate, should its owners so desire.
