The Williams House
Clarksville
Private

circa 1833

The Williams House faces east on the east side of Linden Church Road. It is a five bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running north-south) frame (covered with clapboard) house, resting on a stone foundation, with a two bay wide, two bay deep, two story high, intersecting gable roof (running east-west), frame kitchen wing (a section of which is believed to have been constructed first) which creates an "L" plan.

The building features a central staircase and hall, flanked by a living room and dining room, the latter of which is connected to the original kitchen section of the house. Some alteration has been made to the upstairs building plan, to create a more workable, convenient plan, providing for two additional baths and a laundry room. Otherwise all remains intact with the first floor interior door and window frames, composed of flat pilasters and lintels with central concave flutes, joined at their corners by square blocks, matching a fine living room mantelpiece with similar stylistic detail. Wide random width floors, interior five paneled doors and original staircase are additional features of this outstanding house, constructed by Greenbury Gaither, circa 1833.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Williams House faces east on the east side of Linden Church Road. It is a five bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running north-south) frame (covered with clapboard) house, resting on a stone foundation, with a two bay wide, two bay deep, two story high, intersecting gable roof (running east-west), frame kitchen wing (a section of which is believed to have been constructed first) which creates an "L" plan.

The woodwork and staircase in the main body of the house point to the first half of the nineteenth century. The kitchen wing is believed to be even earlier.

THE DINING ROOM

The dining room takes up the two north bays off the central hall and is lighted by two east and one north window. It features a central, paneled fireplace, with wide mitred molding on its north wall and an original wooden cupboard, east of the fireplace. A five paneled, rectangular entrance door on the east side of its south wall leads into the central hallway with a similar door centered on its west wall leading into the kitchen area. The doors and windows of this room are flanked by pilasters, holding a central concave flute, surmounted by a similar lintel joined at their corners by square blocks.

THE LIVING ROOM

The living room takes up the two south bays off the central hall, lighted by two east and west windows. Its original entrance has been widened and deepened to create closets on each side of this central opening on the south wall of the central hall. The living room is particularly lovely, featuring a central wooden mantlepice, centered on the south wall of the living room, flanked by flat pilasters with a central concave flute, surmounted by a deep, flat, wooden lintel decorated with two similar flutes and flanked by flat pilasters, which are surmounted by square blocks. A crown molding runs around the perimeter of the ceiling of this elevation. The room also features wide, random width floors and a wide, central opening into the hall, which is centered on its south wall.

THE CENTRAL HALL

The central hall of the house runs east-west, featuring five paneled rectangular east and west entrance doors. That on the east, surmounted by a three light transom, leads out to a central three bay wide, one story high, shed roofed, open porch, supported by four square, tapered columns, resting on a flagstone landing, which runs the width of the east elevation. That on the west may once have led to an outside porch along the south elevation of the kitchen wing. (This section is now enclosed featuring a flag stone floor and wide south window, flanked by six-over-six light, double-hung windows, decorated with old interior shutters.) The doors are decorated with door frames, composed of pilasters, featuring a central concave flute, surmounted by a similar lintel, joined at their corners by square blocks. The staircase runs along the north wall of the hallway, featuring square balusters and original knewel post. It breaks at the landing, rather than tapering, which is found to be a feature of late eighteenth and early nineteenth century staircases. The side panels feature a curved line. This staircase leads up and around to a small landing and entrance to the south room, stopping at its east wall. Originally this second floor hall ran the depth of the house, but this shortened hall now holds a central bay, east room bath.

THE SOUTH ROOM

This south room is lighted by two east and west windows, taking up the two south bays of the main building block. It features wide, random width floors and two, wide, cross paneled, rectangular entrance doors on its north wall. That on the east side leads to a bath, that on the west side to the hall. Originally this large room was divided into two equal rooms and the bath was a part of the hall. The woodwork here is mitred, featuring flat pilasters and lintels with a central, squarely cut flute. The window frames are similar. A fireplace, centered on the south wall is covered with paneling, which matches flanking paneled closet doors.

THE NORTH SIDE OF THE MAIN BUILDING BLOCK

The central staircase leads directly up to a wide landing over the kitchen "L" section of the house to an "L" shaped hall, off whose east wall a wide closet is placed, and further north a set of three steps, which leads to an original entrance door into the north side of the main building block. The large north room has been divided into three areas, a small office area located in the southwest corner as you enter, a laundry area in the northwest corner and a central, open bible and cross paneled entrance, leading into another large bedroom, lighted by two east windows, which takes up two thirds of the depth of the two north bays. An original open fireplace is located on the west side of this room's north wall, flanked by flat pilasters, surmounted by a deep, projecting, flat lintel, topped by a mantle shelf. This area features new hardwood floors.

THE KITCHEN "L"

This section has undergone some alteration through the years and may originally have been a one story high, one room, frame structure, of the late eighteenth or early nineteenth century, featuring an exterior stone chimney and sleeping loft above. The main section of the house was probably constructed by Greenbury Gaither, circa 1833, when he acquired the deed to three parcels of land from Samuel I. Donaldson, trustee. The kitchen is believed to have preceeded it, and to have been added to, and its kitchen porch on the south enclosed sometime in the second half of the nineteenth century. The exterior stone chimney on the west wall of the kitchen became an interior chimney, with an enclosed staircase, leading from the first floor to the second floor and north bedroom, placed on the south side of this chimney. The upstairs north bedroom was totally separate from the rest of the house and used to house the servants. Another set of stairs (running north-south), to the second floor was used by the family, placed on the east side of the kitchen. The open porch, along the south side of the kitchen, was enclosed, a room constructed over it and a new gable roof, covering this area and the original two story high kitchen section, constructed.

Further renovations have been made by Mr. and Mrs. Barnsley Williams, descendants of Greenbury Gaither, who constructed the house. The floor of what was once an open porch has been laid in stone and a small powder room and closet added on each side of the small rectangular south window. The handhewn studs of the main building block's west wall have been exposed and filled in by brick, creating an interesting east wall for the kitchen.

SPECIFIC DATES circa 1833 BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Williams House is a good example of vernacular frame architecture in Howard County, Maryland¹ associated with the family of Greenbury Gaither,² who constructed the main building block circa 1833.³

Explanatory Notes

1. The main building block is solidly constructed of a hand hewn mortice and tenon, pegged building frame, the west wall of which has been further reinforced by the addition of brick fillers by Mr. and Mrs. Williams, to create a decorative kitchen wall. The interior woodwork is particularly fine, featuring five paneled, rectangular doors, wide random width floors, original staircase and mantelpieces, as well as door and window frames, composed of flat pilasters and lintels, decorated with a central concave flute, joined at their corners by square blocks.

The woodwork of the second floor is similar, but the pilasters and lintels hold a more squarely cut, central flute.

2. The present owners, Mr. and Mrs. Barnsley Williams are descendants of Greenbury Gaither, who built this house for his family and operated a farm on this property. Two or three children of his children are mentioned in transactions found in a title search, namely; Samuel Gaither, Barbara Gaither and Mrs. Frances K. Linthicum. A Samuel G. and Laura Barnsley, a Charles and Ella Barnsley, and a George and Mary Barnsley are also mentioned giving their interest to Samuel, Elizabeth and Barbara Gaither. In the early 1900's the farm was apparently operated by Samuel Gaither and his sister, Barbara, under the management of Samuel. (78-209) Barbara's sisters, Elizabeth, Hetty, Catherine, Sarah, and Georgianna are all mentioned in the deeds of the early 1900's found in Libers 78 and 79 in the Howard County Land Records. (Please see Title Search) In 1912, Barbara Gaither conveyed two parcels of land to George E. Talbott, her brother-in-law, for $7,500. He and his wife, Georgia raised their only child, William E. Talbott here. In 1953 William E. Talbott, who inherited the farm, sold it to Barnsley and Frances Williams, present owners of the property.

3. Greenbury Gaither acquired three parcels of land by deed dated 19 December 1833 (Anne Arundel County WSG18-471) from Samuel I. Donaldson, trustee. The land comprised parts of tracts of land called "Altogether" and "Toddy", including a parcel number 2, mentioned in the deed of August 1, 1953.

The main building block of the house is believed to have been constructed circa 1833 by Greenbury and Catharine Gaither and is further substantiated by Mr. Williams, whose grandmother visited her family here at the farm,now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Williams. The farm was increased by some 96 acres in 1848 by the acquisition of parcel 1 from Christian Close.
