9. Description: This T-shaped, two-and-a-half story frame and log structure is built on a stone foundation with a concrete floored basement. It consists of a log front section facing west, and a rear section with a new one story addition behind it. An open entry, with sides made of assorted glass panels, is attached on the north side of the addition. The front section has 6" wood drop siding, the rear section has been resurfaced with asphalt shingles, and the new addition has aluminum siding. There are two brick chimneys, and the cross gable roofs are covered with asphalt shingle. There is a hipped roof over the front porch, and a shed roof over the rear addition. Window sizes and types are varied throughout the house. Boxed eaves overhang the house by 8". The original log house is today used as a front parlor, and opens up into the Victorian back of the house. The remains of a large, brick chimney can still be seen on the southeast side. Outbuildings are a 20' by 8' wooden chicken coop and a 20' by 26' cinderblock garage.

10. Significance: The John Leaman house is an interesting example of the integration of 18th century log construction and 19th century Victorian frame addition, providing a visual capsule of the County's architectural history. The log section of the house dates back to at least 1801 when Thomas Kirk sold his property "with improvements" to Arnold Warfield. The early 1800s witnessed a rapid turnover in property ownership in Clarksburg, and this property was sold four times by 1818 when Wattee Williams bought it. The Williams family, who were carpenters, owned it until 1853. In this period it became part of the business center of Clarksburg, a shoe business being on one side and a smithy on the other, a hotel directly across the street and a machine shop further up the road.

John Williams sold the house in 1853 but in 1858 it was sold back to his son, after being "improved", and John Jr. sold it in 1866 to Dr. Rezin R. Thompson, one of the town's leading physicians. In 1871 Dr. Thompson sold it to John Leaman, carpenter, cabinet and coffin maker. Leaman died in 1883, but his wife and daughter added the Victorian section about 1890. The property remained in the family until 1961.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This T-shaped, two-and-a-half story frame and log structure is built on a stone foundation with a concrete floored basement. It consists of a log front section (2 bays by 2 bays, 15' x 22') facing west, and a rear section (1 bay by 2 bays, 20' x 16') with a new one story addition (1 bay by 1 bay, 8' x 22') behind it. An open entry, with sides made of assorted glass panels, is attached on the north side of the addition.

The front (west) section has 6" wood drop siding, the rear section has been resurfaced with asphalt shingles, and the new addition has aluminum siding.

The roof over the 8' x 22' front porch is supported by three 4" x 4" turned wood posts. It has a wood floor 6" above grade. There is a stone bulkhead, with metal doors, on the north side of the front section.

An exterior brick chimney (partly covered with stucco) is centered on the south side of the front section. A second brick chimney is centered within the rear section.

The wood paneled doors, with glass in their upper halves, have plain wood frames. The windows on the lower level of the front section are one-over-one double-hung wood. Those at the upper level are six light wood casements on the north and south sides and an eight light (1 high & 8 wide) casement in the front dormer. There are two-over-two double-hung wood windows in the rear section. The new rear addition has jalousie windows.

The ridge of the asphalt shingle gable roof over the front section runs north-south. The ridge of the gable roof over the rear section runs east-west, 6' higher and forms a hop as it slopes down to meet the front roof. There is a hip roof over the front porch and a shed roof over the new rear addition. The box eaves overhang the house by 8" and return 2' around the gable end on the east side of the rear section.

The front (west) facade has a door on the left, balanced by a pair of windows on the right, at the lower level and a shed dormer centered upstairs. The north facade has two windows at the upper level of the front section, and four windows (2 up and 2 down) and a door in the rear section. The east side has one window upstairs and the jalousie windowed addition below. The open side of the glass entry faces east. The south elevation shows three windows (2 up and 1 down) and the chimney, in the front section, and four windows (2 up and 2 down) in the rear section. There is a jalousie window in the rear addition.

The house is 20' back from Frederick Road, and faces west on a 1½ acre lot. There is a 20' x 26' cinderblock garage with an asphalt shingle roof on the northeast corner, and a 20' x 8', partly tarpapered, wooden chicken coop on the southeast corner.

Architecturally the house is interesting. When Mrs. Leaman constructed her modern (c. 1890) house on the property, she did not demolish the original log structure. This section instead became the present-day front parlor and opened up into the newer addition. In form, the front "cabin" is easily recognizable as an example of a late 18th century "Virginia House" type that was common throughout tidewater area. The remains of a large, brick chimney can still be seen on the southeast side of the building. This log section of the house dates back to at least 1801, and may be much older.

The Victorian back of the house, though much newer, well exemplifies the 19th century farmhouse architecture common in Montgomery County. It is the juxtaposition of the early cabin with the late farmhouse that makes the structure so interesting, for it provides a visual history of the county dating back to settlement days.
