There are six-over-six double-hung windows. There is a complex of three barns southwest of the house. One barn is a notable carpenter gothic bank barn.
 Three barns compose the outbuildings. One of these has paired, electric, victorian design louvered windows flanking the large opening on the east facade. The gable roof has a decorative trim that was on the manor house as shown in an old photograph. A one story tenant house also remains.
10. Significance: The barns at Bonnie Brae are about all that remain of a small manor put together by James A. Boyd in the late 19th century, near the tracks of the Metropolitan Branch of the B & O Railroad. A small house remains, reportedly used as a store for Boyd's employees. Boyd moved to the area in 1870 with the contract to build six of the most difficult sections of the Metropolitan Branch. He began buying up land to house railroad workers, and eventually owned 1,100 acres on both sides of the track. The railroad built a station there and named it "Boyd's Station". Boyd built himself a comfortable home, numerous barns, wind-mills, dairies and tenant houses. Using innovative techniques, he drained swampland and fertilized the exhausted soil, turning it into a production dairy farm. Milk was shipped into Washington by train.
 In 1966 the current owner demolished the manor house, and all but one tenant house and three barns.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This one and a half story frame tenant house, three bays across and one bay deep, is the only remaining domestic structure of Bonnie Brae Farm. Built on brick foundations, it has a central hallway and two rooms on each floor. The exterior of the house is now covered by asbestos shingles. The roof is covered by raised seam metal roofing and has boxed eaves. The remains of a decorative bargeboard may be seen at the south gable end. An exterior stove chimney is visible at the southwest corner of the south elevation. A clapboard and glass porch extends nearly the full length of the east(front) elevation and is accessible by five poured concrete steps. A second porch is on the north side of the house. There are double-hung six-over-six windows throughout.

Southwest of the house stands a complex of three barns. Closest to the house is a large rectangular barn with board and batten siding. It has a gable roof covered by raised seam metal roofing. Beyond this is a bank barn with carpenter gothic detailing. This cross-gabled structure has board and batten exterior walls and is supported by fieldstone foundations. One of the most salient features of this barn are the paired, eclectic, victorian design louvered windows which flank the large opening on the east facade. Most distant from the house is a large modern barn building constructed of cinderblocks and having a gambrel roof.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The barns at Bonnie Brae are about all that remain of a small, feudal-type village put together by James A. Boyd in the late 19th century, directly related to the Metropolitan Branch of the B & O Railroad.

Boyd emigrated from Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1848, and went to work for Thomas Scott of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. He married Sarah Rinehart of West Virginia, and continued working on the railroad and dam construction until 1861 when he moved to Brazil. There he built railroads for the Emperor Dom Pedro, and became personally acquainted with the emperor. A cane from Dom Pedro was treasured by Mr. Boyd until his death.

In 1866 the war was over and he returned to the States. He secured contracts for several sections of the Metropolitan Branch of the B & O. Boyd undertook some of the toughest construction problems on the Metropolitan Branch - the six section (6 miles) between roughly Sellman and somewhere east of the Little Seneca. This included Parr's Ridge, the longest, deepest, hardest cut of all, and the difficult passage of the Little Seneca ravine. John W. Garrett, president of the B & O, apparently regarded Boyd as the most experienced railroad contractor available.

Boyd bought land and built shelters for the railroad workers, accumulating over 1,100 acres of property in his own name. He built a comfortable home, numerous barns, windmills, dairies and tenant houses. At the time he began to buy farmland, the soil was considered exhausted and had been abandoned for farming. However Boyd used fertilizer and skill, and changed his farms into fertile land. He developed a dairy of 100 cows, and surrounded his estate with white washed board fences.¹ He planted orchards, and lined his long driveway with ornamental shrubs and trees.²

The B & O built a large station at the new village, naming it Boyds Station in honor of Col. Boyd.

Boyd was a founder of the Boyds Presbyterian Church, and is listed in the church records as the first elder.³

He owned 8 draft horses, and used them to drain the swampland, installing tile, stone and wooden devices so that he could use this land. He put in fish ponds stocked with carp, built 8 barns for his hay storage and a steam engine to pump water, shell corn, cut hay, saw wood and grind cattle feed. His cows were a crossbred Alderney/Durham, and produced enough milk to ship 180 gallons of milk daily into Washington on the train.⁴

At his funeral in 1896 the B & O honored him by stopping all their express trains at Boyds Station.⁵

His heirs sold the farm to Kenneth G. and Alice P. Heisler in 1942.⁶ Mrs. Heisler sold it to the present owners in 1966, who demolished the decaying manor house in 1975. The single, remaining house on the property is reportedly the former store for employees of James Boyd.⁷ Three of Boyd's barns are extant.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The house is a two story, frame structure with a three bay main (south) facade. The central doorway has transom and sidelights; the flanking windows are 6/9 double hung sash extending to the floor. The second story central bay is a double glazed door flanked by sidelights. The two windows are 6/6 double hung sash. The central gable, with a round headed window, has bargeboards cut in a fleur-de-lis pattern. The end walls are three bays with 6/6 double hung sash. The boxed cornice is returned into the gable end. To the north is a two story el with a central chimney. In the front yard is a stone mounting block.

North of the house are four farm dependencies. All are sheathed with board and batten siding over braced framing. The window heads are arched in an Italianate manner, with louvered openings. One bankbarn is of cross-gable design, with the north gable carried forward as a porch; the eaves have scalloped bargeboards. The basement is an open cattle pen. There is a corncrib with a central crib and flanking sheds; it had a lantern with two arched, louvered openings on each face.

Knights of Pythias and member of the Order of American Mechanics.

On October 20, 1880, the marriage of Mr. Whitcomb and Miss Sarah Elizabeth Lichliter was solemnized. Her father, the late Conrad Lichliter, was a well known citizen of Woodstock, Va. Of three brothers one is a successful lawyer in Washington, D. C., another a leading physician in Dayton, Ohio, and the third the popular pastor of St. Luke's Reformed Church at Lancaster, Pa.

To the union of our subject and wife one daughter and four sons were born, namely: Edward R., Bernard Lichliter, George Merle, Raymond Evers and Jay Dinges (deceased in September, 1892). The boys, who are manly lads, are being taught to work by their father, who purchased a small place near Thurmont mainly for this purpose, and they have reason to be proud of the fine fields of wheat and corn which they raise. Thus habits of industry are combined with their moral and spiritual education.

where he was employed almost three years, his work being eminently satisfactory to his employers. The contract made when going there provided the option that he should have free passage back to Scotland or $100 in cash, and, acting upon the advice of the captain of a trading vessel, he chose the latter. He was about twenty-five years of age when he landed in Philadelphia. In that city he met Thomas Scott, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, who employed him to do masonry work on the road near Harrisburg, Pa. Afterward he superintended the construction of a section of road, which he completed in 1852. Next he went to West Virginia and constructed two sections of the Parkersburg branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. While engaged in that work, he formed the acquaintance of Benjamin H. Latrobe, of Baltimore, who became his life-long friend.

Going from Virginia to Ohio, Colonel Boyd took a contract for the construction of part of the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad. However, this undertaking brought disastrous results. In 1857 the construction company failed, owing him $30,000. Here the high sense of honor which he ever displayed in all his dealings was most nobly shown. He might have taken advantage of the failure and avoided paying his employes, but he felt this would be dishonest, so he sold all his machinery, implements and other possessions, and gathered together all the money he could secure, and with it he paid the entire indebtedness; but it left him and his wife to commence life anew, with all their possessions in two trunks.

In Baltimore he joined the firm of Hoblitzell & Crowley, and engaged in building a dam near the Relay House for the city water works. In the latter part of 1860 he went to Memphis, Tenn., with the intention of engaging in railroad building there, but owing to the great excitement incident to the coming civil strife, he recognized the futility of any such work there, so returned to Baltimore. In February, 1861, he sailed for Brazil and for several years was engaged in railroad building there. While in South America he enjoyed the friendship of Dom Pedro, who, at one time when inspecting a railroad, was so

COL. JAMES ALEXANDER BOYD. The record of the life of Colonel Boyd contains much of interest and much that is worthy of emulation by those starting out for themselves without money and among strangers. The founder of Boyds, Montgomery County, was born in Kilwinning, Ayrshire, Scotland, December 22, 1823, and was one of a large family. When one year of age he was taken into the home of his grandmother, a woman of noble character and much piety, to whose influence he owed the formation in his character of a love for all that is upright, just and true. When quite young he served an apprenticeship to the stonemason's trade and about the time he finished his period of service his grandmother died. As hers was the only home he had ever known, he felt the ties that bound him there were broken, and therefore did not care to remain in Scotland. With two other young men he took a contract to work in the construction of a breakwater at Kingston, Jamaica, pleased with the work done that he presented the cane he was carrying to Colonel Boyd, as a token of his gratitude. This cane the colonel had at the time of his death.

Returning to the United States, in 1865, Colonel Boyd the following year secured contracts for the building of several sections of the metropolitan branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. This was the work that brought him to Montgomery County and selecting the spot most conveniently located, he purchased a tract of land upon which to erect tenements where he could shelter his men and stock. This place is twenty-nine and one-half miles from Washington and in his honor was called Boyds. The land had long been abandoned as worthless for agricultural purposes and was selling for $5 an acre, but advantage was taken of his necessity and he was obliged to pay $30 an acre for the one hundred and thirty acres he bought. Here he decided to make his home. The transition he made in the country was remarkable. Then the only vegetation was broom-sedge and patches of scrubby pine, with small stretches of hardwood forests. He was ridiculed for his idea of making the sterile land productive, but the time came when all acknowledged the wisdom of his judgment. By an intelligent use of lime, plaster and other fertilizers, he changed the entire appearance of the place.

The last work of railroad construction done by Colonel Boyd was heavy tunneling for the Baltimore & Ohio, on a branch from Washington, Pa., to the Connellsville branch. For a year or two afterward he was engaged by the company in confidential work of inspecting and securing right of way. The services he rendered the road brought him into close relations with its president, John W. Garrett, and their friendship continued until Mr. Garrett's death.

From time to time Colonel Boyd added to his original purchases of land until at the time of his death he had thirteen hundred acres, all but one hundred and sixty of which he personally conducted. The numerous buildings he erected gave the farm the appearance of a village. His success caused a change in the entire surrounding region, for others followed his example and attained a like success. His home became noted for the hospitality dispensed. Many noted men, among them Attorney-General Garland, Senators Beck, Gorman and Blackburn, were recipients of that hospitality. He was proud of his dairy and always had at least one hundred milk cows, his preference being the Durham, or short-horn breed. In the dairy barn a steam engine pumps the water, shells the corn, saws the wood, cuts the hay and grinds the food for the stock. The water is pumped from a depth of sixty feet into a cooling cistern, which is kept at a temperature of fifty-three degrees. All animal heat is thus extracted from the milk previous to shipping. Two hundred gallons of milk are shipped daily to Washington. The dairy barn holds one hundred tons of hay and accommodates one hundred cows, fifty on each side, with a broad pathway between, water and feed troughs for each cow, and stanchions so arranged that in case of necessity two boys could release them all in three minutes. All the floor, except the standing place, is of concrete, and all is kept most scrupulously clean. The house stands back from the road far enough to avoid all dust, and the magnificent lawn adds greatly to the attractiveness of the place. Eighteen or twenty hands are employed on the farm, and about twenty horses are used for cultivating the land. What was once a swamp, back of the barn, has been drained with tile and is now a rich timothy meadow, yielding two and one-half tons to the acre. Another swamp, in the southern part of the farm, has also been drained and made valuable. Since the death of Colonel Boyd the place has been superintended by his wife, who is an exceptionally well-preserved woman. She is assisted by her nephew, James Boyd Maughlin, and her brother, David Rinehart, who was taken into her home when a boy of thirteen and for some years has had charge of the place.

At the building of the Boyd Presbyterian Church in 1873, Colonel Boyd took an active part in the work and contributed largely to the building of the structure. He was an elder in the church for many years. Fraternally he was connected with Mystic Circle Lodge No. 109, A. F. & A. M., Baltimore; Maryland Commandery No. 1, K. T.; Jerusalem Chapter No. 9, B. A. M., and St. Andrew's Society, Baltimore. [June 22, 1851, he married Sarah, daughter of Jonathan and Zilpah (Allen) Rinehart, and the mother of eleven children. Her father was born in Allegany County, Md., and was an influential farmer, an old-line Whig and for several terms a member of the state legislature. He died at forty-five years.

Colonel Boyd died December 21, 1896, when he was one day of being seventy-three years. He came to the end of life full of years and honored by all who knew him. For some three years he was almost entirely confined to the house by rheumatism and suffered much from this cause; but his mind was clear, his judgment unclouded, his counsel wise and his manner most genial and cheerful to the very last. He was a man of great generosity to those who needed help. Many can testify to the proofs of his generous kindness of heart and practical helpfulness. His integrity of character and uprightness of life were unquestionable.

The funeral discourse, delivered by Rev. J. L. French of Washington, D. C., was upon the topic, "Death's Lessons." In it this tribute was given to Colonel Boyd: "His nature was like the rugged mountains of his native land—rock-ribbed, but beautified by the verdure with which nature covers them. His innate kindness of heart was the fountain of ready help, whenever he could give it to those who needed his aid. What he did in this direction was with no flourish of trumpets, no spirit of ostentation or display. There are many who can testify to the readiness and efficiency of the aid he rendered. He possessed the unusual magnetic power by which he attracted and bound to himself, as with hooks of steel, in the strongest friendship, men of great intellect and prominence. While he was denied the advantages of a liberal education, made no pretensions to literary culture and never held any public position, yet he numbered among his warmest friends senators, cabinet officers, professional men—some of the most intellectual and prominent men of the nation. The one overmastering trait of his character, I think, and the key to his success, was his stern, inflexible personal integrity, his unswerving honesty of purpose and conduct. He scorned all trickery and double dealing, and in his business transactions was the very soul of honor. This, aided by his good judgment, executive ability and careful looking after details, made his life a success. * * * His home life was one of the charms of his character. Affectionate, kind, considerate, generous, he did everything a man could do to make a happy home and he succeeded."

The kindness of Colonel Boyd in his home was also alluded to in the address of Rev. John Chester, D. D., who said: "The home life of Colonel Boyd was a beautiful example of his loving, tender and true heart. As a husband, his love and care were ever for that wife who had walked by his side for so many years, who had shared with him the trials of youth and the success of his manhood, who had soothed with gentle ministrations his declining years. To the other members of his household he was as a father, watching over their interests, loving them all and loved by all. To his friends he was always true, and the doors of his home were open and a generous hospitality always provided. Such was the man whose loss will be increasingly realized in this community."

REV. CORNELIUS L. KEEDEY, president of the Kee Mar College for Young Women, in Hagerstown, has been at the head of this well-known institution of learning for nearly a quarter of a century and to his earnest labors is due the high standing the college bears in this section of the United States. He is a man of broad and liberal scholarship and wide and varied experience, and seems peculiarly fitted by nature and training for such a responsible position as the one he occupies.
