9. Description: This irregularly shaped, two-and-a-half story, five bay by two bay house faces east. The house has white stuccoed exterior walls. A porch wraps around the east and south elevations. It has a flat roof supported by four wooden columns, the porch is enclosed by a balustraded railing. On the west elevation there is a screened porch adjacent to the porch on the south elevation. At the second level this porch is enclosed. On the north elevation there is a portico: four columns support the flat roof. The house has six-over-six double-hung windows arranged in groups or singles. There is an intersecting gable roof with asbestos shingles.

10. Significance: This large house was built about 1850 by Rev. James Sebastian Hamilton Henderson, locally important civic leader, and second pastor of the Neelsville/Darnestown Presbyterian Church. The intersection of Routes 27 and 355, where the house is located, is locally called "Henderson's Corner".

The land on which the house was constructed was the dowry of Henderson's wife Fosanna Neel, daughter of Neelsville's founder, Joseph Neel. Neel, a native of Londonderry, Ireland, named the house for his hometown.

Harry Hoskinson purchased the house from Henderson's heirs, John and Robert Henderson, in 1929. Hoskinson moved the house from the east to the west side of the present Route 355.

The present owner purchased the property from the estate of Hoskinson in 1961. The house is rented.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This irregularly shaped two and a half story house was built on brick foundations and is five bays across and two bays deep. The house faces east and has stuccoed exterior walls.

A porch extends across the south half of the east elevation and continues around the south elevation. On the east elevation the flat porch roof is supported by four wooden columns. A railing with narrowly spaced square balusters encloses the porch area, six concrete steps lead up to the wooden porch. The porch roof has a decorative balustrade. On the west elevation, the porch is enclosed by screens. Above the screened section of the porch there is an enclosed second floor room. The east (front) door has round headed wooden panels. The door is flanked by three light sidelights and surmounted by a three light transom. On the north elevation a portico extends out over the driveway. Four round columns support the flat roof. The portico roof has a decorative balustrade. Seven concrete steps lead from the drivey to a platform before the north door.

The house has six-over-six double-hung windows in single or group arrangements. There is one twenty light window flanked by six-over-six windows on the west elevation. The house has an intersecting gable roof which has asbestos covering. There is one exterior end chimney on the south elevation.

The east (front) door opens into an east-west hallway. An open string two run stairway with a heavy newel post ascends from east to west along the north interior wall. At the west end of the hall is a sun room. To the south is the living room and to the northeast is the dining room. The kitchen is in the northwest corner of the house. Between the kitchen and the dining room there is a small entry hall. An open string two run stairway ascends from north to south along the west interior wall.

Floors throughout the house are narrow boards. Walls and ceilings are plaster over lath. There are molded door surrounds and the doors themselves are paneled.

The house sits back from the road, hidden by a hedge and a thick stand of pine trees. The house is surrounded by lawns. South of the house is a swimming pool. Northwest of the house is a two story, two bay by one bay frame structure. This house has a gable roof with asbestos covering and a massive fieldstone chimney base with a brick stack of the west elevation. The house is in very poor condition.
