DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

There are several small, turn-of-the-century houses at this location and further east along Oaklyn Drive. All are two-story, frame dwellings. The one house that is located west of Falls Road has a two-bay front, with a pedimented gable facade. It features a Victorian porch, with turned posts and elaborate brackets.

Across the street is an older house of traditional local style, with a three-bay main (west) facade, center gable and central doorway. It has a returned cornice, and two smaller wings that telescope from the rear of the main house. Farther east along Oaklyn Drive are several plain houses that remain from the old Negro settlement here. Near these is the old Ingalls home, where Mr. Edgar Ingalls lived and ran the Gold Mine Museum until recently. His relatives, the Collins family, had farmed here for generations, and Mr. Ingalls worked in the nearby Gold Mines. These houses may represent settlement that resulted from the "gold fever" era that ran from the 1870's to 1920's. More likely, however, several were built as a result of the trolley line that operated here from 1913-1921. This line was built by a real estate venture that hoped (and generally failed) to attract commuters from Washington.
