DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Holly View is architecturally important, as it combines both primitive and sophisticated elements in its construction. Its overall style is similar to some of the County's earliest homes (particularly the Belt House and No Gain in Chevy Chase and the Holland houses at Brookeville), while its construction (as presently seen) may date as late as the 1850s (though there are some Victorian additions).

Holly View is situated on a densely-wooded hilltop above the Northwest Branch stream valley and Route 29 (Columbia Pike). The house faces southeast.

It is a large, two-story frame structure with a three-bay main (southeast) facade. The roof extends out over the front of the house to form a two-story galleried porch. The upper level of the porch has been partially enclosed with pairs of eight-pane, casement-type windows. These rest on a railing composed of flat, scroll-type balusters of Victorian vintage. The lower level of the porch is open and features a central door with transom and side-lights. This door is flanked by two over-sized, six-over-six windows that have unusual double panels beneath them.

Another unusual feature of Holly View is the flush or ship-lap siding that occurs only on the front of the house. The rest of the house (with the exception of the back) is covered with very old, rough weather boards which were apparently added when the house was extended greatly to the rear, forming the present four-bay salt box or shed-roof design. Narrow brick chimneys on both sides of the building are probably 20th century replacements. The present roof is a standing-seam metal roof, and the foundation is of fieldstone.

The front basement is dug out, with dirt walls. The sills rest upon a stone foundation, with floor joists of half-round logs resting on the front and rear sills. Two square-cut girts, each about one third from the end walls, are mortised into the sills and support lengthwise sawn joists in the center section of the basement.

There are several interesting outbuildings on the property, and a number of remarkable plantings (including several huge pine trees) centered about the old circular carriage drive, in front of the house.

One of the outbuildings is a much-altered slave quarters, a redwood colored structure located at the corner of Colesville Road and Southwood Drive. The central portion of the cabin is a two-storied wooden shingled structure over logs. There are one-story additions on two sides of this with a shed addition to the rear. Some of this is shingle and the rest clapboard. The chimney appears new. There is also a narrow circular stairs to the second story and the cellar is of cobbles carried from the Branch.

SPECIFIC DATES late 18th century BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Holly View is significant as an early dwelling, owned for the greater part of its history by only three families.

The property was patented as "Harding's Choice" in the early 18th century, and Josiah Beane(s) was living on 126 acres there in 1783, when he was assessed for one "old framed dwelling house, 16' x 12'". Other log buildings were mentioned, and the land was described as "all cleared and thin soil". Josiah Beane(s) died in 1822, and the property was inherited by his granddaughter, Priscilla Kisner.¹ Nine years later, Priscilla and her husband, Francis Gittings, sold Holly View to Washington Duvall, of the wealthy and influential Montgomery County family.² It remained in the Duvall and Jackson families for some time.

In 1857, James L. Bond, owner of the merchant mill complex at nearby Burnt Mills, bought the property.³ Another owner was James F. Meline, Comptroller of the U.S. Currency. By the 1880s, Holly View and 80 acres had become the country estate of Col. Oliver D. Kinsman, a prominent Union veteran of the Civil War. The arrival of the Kinsmans illustrated the subtle changes that were beginning to take place in Montgomery County -- particularly in "Berry's District". "Yankee" officers and professional men were coming out to the country from Washington, and their different backgrounds would begin to alter the social status and erode the power of the old "planter aristocracy". Holly View was described at that time as "a large frame Dwelling House containing nine or ten rooms, barn, stable, corn shed, and all necessary out buildings. There is a good apple orchard on the place, besides pears, grapes and small fruits of different kinds, and an excellent garden. It is well watered, two wells of excellent water, one at kitchen porch and the other at the barn. It is mostly cleared land, only a small portion being in wood.... It is a most desirable property, being in the midst of an intelligent and enterprising community and convenient to churches, schools, mills, postoffice and railroad."⁴

Oliver D. and Emma M. L. Kinsman were active in Republican affairs and in the activities of Grace Episcopal Church in Silver Spring. Mrs. Kinsman died in 1920, and the Col. in 1927. Holly View then became the property of their three daughters,⁵ who lived in the house for many years. The last surviving daughter, Olive, died in 1971 at Holly View, at the age of 77. Kinsman heirs have rented out the property for about ten years.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The land was part of Harding's Choice, granted to Charles Harding in 1737. In 1781, Josiah Bean bought 126 acres, who conveyed the land to Francis Gittings in 1831. Dr. Washington Duball of Fairview, later bought the land; by 1865, Jasper Jackson had acquired it. James Meline, Comptroller of the Currency, purchased "Holly View" from Jackson in 1881 and sold it to Col. Oliver Kinsman in 1886. The house is in the Kinsman family today.

Holly View

IN the Silver Spring area of Montgomery County, on the Colesville Highway, one may catch a glimpse of a driveway bordered by huge white pines leading up a steep hill, easily overlooked in the heavily wooded section through which the sharply curving highway approaches Burnt Mills.

On top of the hill at the end of the avenue of huge pines stands the lovely old house believed to have been built between 1780 and 1800. Some of the box bushes from ten to fifteen feet tall are probably between 125 and 150 years old. The white pines are probably about the same age.

Seventy-five years ago Holly View was a farm with a tenant house and a number of acres under cultivation.

Holly View is the home of 3 daughters of Col. Oliver Dorrance Kinsman, a distinguished Civil War soldier. Col. Kinsman was a Yankee from Maine who narrowly escaped hanging when the Civil War broke out. Employed on railroad construction in Florida, he was sped to safety in a locomotive by a friend who rescued him from a group of hot secessionists. Fleeing to Iowa, he enlisted as a private, fought throughout the war, and died at ninety-three still carrying in his body a bullet received at Shiloh. He was with General Sherman in the historic march to the sea, and served on the staff of General Belknap, Secretary of War to President Grant. When Col. Kinsman was retired from the Army, he travelled extensively for years through the South settling war claims.

Colonel Kinsman, born February 1835, married Emma Matilda Louisa Richardson. For some time they lived in a house at Twelfth and G Streets, N. W., where some of their children were born. In 1886 they purchased Holly View, reportedly paying $75 per acre. At the beginning of the Civil War, Mrs. Kinsman's grandfather charged her father, "Now see here, if you let your sons go into this infernal Cain-and-Abel War, don't come crying to me afterwards for bread."

NO. 45 G-10 PROBABLY JOSIAH BEAN CA. 1784

The present Kinsman sisters of Holly View have a transcript of the several owners of this property, starting with Harding's Choice, a land grant made to Charles Harding on July 25, 1737. They have a deed to Josiah Bean for 126 acres, dated March, 1781, and Bean may have built the oldest part of the house. It is believed he conveyed the land to Francis Gittings in 1831, who in turn conveyed it to Dr. Washington Duvall of Fairview. Joseph H. Bond, Burnt Mills, deeded Holly View to Jasper Jackson. (On a map dated 1865, Jasper Jackson is shown as owner of the property.)

Records disclose another owner after Jasper Jackson. This was James F. Meline who purchased Holly View from Jackson in 1881 and later sold to Col. Kinsman in 1886. Meline was Comptroller of the Currency, according to the owners, the Misses Elinor and Olive D. Kinsman, and their sister, Mrs. Lucretia B. (Kinsman) Woodford, a widow who shares the home with her sisters. Miss Angela Kinsman passed away in April 1961, leaving the three sisters to keep the home intact.
