

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #71B-12 Building Date: 1880's

Building Name: Bernard Luers House

Location: 8301 Chestnut Avenue, Bowie, Maryland

Private/Residence/Occupied/Good/Inaccessible

Description:

The Bernard Luers House is a two-and-one-half story frame dwelling with late Victorian decorative elements; it is roughly square, having been expanded from an earlier frame farmhouse of I-house plan. The main block of the house is three bays by one bay, with entrance in the central bay of the main west facade, through a Victorian style door with four molded panels under a single pane transom. The central entrance is flanked by two projecting two-story semi-octagonal towers, each topped by a steeply-pitched pyramidal roof of patterned tin. The cornice is boxed with double crown molding, and is returned at the gable ends. The roof is covered with patterned tin. The foundations are of local iron-bearing stone. Behind the main block, a two-and-one-half-story kitchen wing extends to the east, flush with the north gable end of the main block. The kitchen ell is two bays by two, with gable roof; the cornice is returned at its east gable end. In the corner formed by the main block and the kitchen wing, a two-story addition was later constructed which converted the original L-shaped dwelling into a full square.

Significance:

The Bernard Luers House is one of only two late Victorian dwellings surviving within the City of Bowie. Although it has been altered over the years, it retains the lines of a Victorian vernacular dwelling with some Queen Anne style features. It is one of the earliest surviving dwellings built in the railroad junction, Huntington, now known as Bowie. The house was built by Bernard Luers, who had immigrated from Germany in 1857, and in the 1870's had settled in the new town of Huntington on the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad. Two lots amounting to 20 acres were sold to Bernard Luers in 1876 and 1877; in the 1880's he began construction of the present house. It followed the plan of a standard I-house, but was enlarged and distinguished by projecting two-story corner towers. Bernard Luers worked as a shoemaker in the town of Huntington; two of his sons built houses for their families within a few blocks of the subject house. The Bernard Luers house is the oldest surviving late Victorian frame dwelling in Bowie. It stands today at the southern edge of the town of Bowie, protected and secluded by screen plantings, an important architectural reminder of the heyday of the railroad town of Huntington/Bowie.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Bernard Luers House is a two-and-one-half story frame dwelling with late Victorian decorative elements; it is roughly square, having been expanded from an earlier frame farmhouse of I-house plan. It stands on a five acre lot, heavily treed on the west and north, with pasture on the east.

The main block of the house is to the west, three bays by one bay, with entrance in the central bay of the main west facade. Entrance is through a Victorian style door with four molded panels under a single pane transom; a small enclosure with peaked roof of patterned tin shelters the door itself.

The central entrance is flanked by two projecting two-story semi-octagonal towers, each topped by a steeply-pitched pyramidal roof of patterned tin. The building is covered with white horizontal asbestos siding. Windows are generally 2/2 double hung sash, with plain board surrounds painted light green. There are no shutters. The cornice is boxed with double crown molding, and is returned at the gable ends. The roof is covered with patterned tin. The foundations are of local iron-bearing stone, parged in some places with concrete.

Behind the basic I-house plan of the main block, a two-and-one-half-story kitchen wing extends to the east, flush with the north gable end of the main block. The kitchen ell is two bays by two bays, and has a gable roof; the cornice is returned at its east gable end.

In the (southeast) corner formed by the main block and the kitchen wing, a two-story addition was later constructed which converted the original L-shaped dwelling into a full square. This one-bay-by-two-bay addition has a pyramidal roof of patterned tin. Siding, window treatment and cornices of the wing and the corner addition are the same as those of the main block.

Interior plan of the main block consists of central stairhall with a parlor in each side; a fire place in the east wall of each parlor was originally served by a tall corbelled brick chimney. The staircase has a heavy turned newel with mitred cap. The window and door surrounds have molded multi-band trim and bulls-eye corner blocks.

#7 (Continued)

A cellar space has been dug out under the main block, accessible by a grade-level walkway cut into the slope south of the house. Under the kitchen wing is a cellar space enclosed with thick foundation walls of local iron bearing stone; this cellar space (which may predate the construction of the subject house) was originally accessible by a flight of stone steps outside its north wall. Another interesting feature of the basement area is the circular brick cistern beneath part of the main block and part of the southeast addition. A curving flight of steps has, in recent years, been built into the cistern, and is used as a secondary entrance to the basement space.

The house lot is well screened from Chestnut Avenue on the west by a line of evergreens, and shrubs line the driveway which comes south from 13th Street. There are several mature linden trees close to the house. Northeast of the house is a stable and beyond it to the east is a fenced in horse pasture.

At the turn of this century, Luers filled in the inside (southeast) corner of the ell, by building a two-story addition with pyramidal roof; this addition converted the L-shaped dwelling into a full square.³

Bernard Luers died in 1910, and the house with 20 acres was sold by his family; the property changed hands many times during this century. After 1940, it was for nearly a quarter century the home of the Kline family, and since 1963 it has been the home of the Brown family.⁴

The Bernard Luers house is the oldest surviving late Victorian frame dwelling in Bowie. It has been well cared for, and the land continues to be used for the pasture and stabling of a few horses. The house stands today at the southern edge of the town of Bowie, protected and secluded by screen plantings, an important architectural reminder of the heyday of the railroad town of Huntington/Bowie.
