HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #71B-15

Building Date: ca. 1727, 1802
1900, 1970

Building Name: Fair Running

Location: 7704 Laurel-Bowie Road, Bowie, Maryland

Public/Recreation/Occupied/Good/Accessible

Description

Fair Running is a two-and-one-half story stone gambrel-roof building of the early eighteenth century; it has been much expanded and altered and today serves as the clubhouse of the Bowie Golf and Country Club. The oldest part of the building is two and one half stories high, with gambrel roof, built of local iron-bearing sandstone painted white. It is four bays by two bays, and faces roughly east. The original east entrance is now hidden by a porch which has been enclosed to form a modern one-story flat-roof lobby. There are three irregularly spaced shed-roof dormers in the lower east plane of the roof. There is an exterior stone chimney centered in the south gambrel end; it has weatherings above the second story windows and is built of brick above the weatherings. There is an interior flush chimney at the north gambrel end. The gambrel roof is covered with gray asbestos shingle. There is a two-story frame gable-roof wing extending west from and at right angles to the main block, built at the beginning of this century. Wrapped around the south, west, and north of this wing is a modern flat-roof addition. Beneath the south three-quarters of the main block, the stone foundation encloses a cellar.

Significance:

Fair Running is a rare surviving example of an early eighteenth century stone gambrel-roof dwelling. The house stands on Isaac's Discovery; in 1727 Joseph Peach built on it this small stone house, approximately 20 feet by 20 feet, with gambrel roof. In the years following, Peach acquired two more tracts which adjoined his home plantation; the lands passed to his son and grandson of the same name. Early in the nineteenth century Joseph Peach III expanded his small stone dwelling; on a stone in the wall of the exterior basement stairs was carved "Rebuilt 1802". At the same time, he resurveyed his property and renamed it Fair Running. The plantation changed hands several times during the nineteenth century; in 1885, the 234-acre farm and dwelling house were sold to Bernard F. Maenner, who added the two-story west wing. In 1965, the Maenner family sold the house, with 130 acres, to the Belair Golf and Country Club, and the house has subsequently undergone significant changes. In spite of these alterations, Fair Running remains a very significant historic site; it is one of only two surviving examples of this type in Prince George's County.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Fair Running (or the Maenner House) is a two-and-one-half story stone gambrel-roof building of the early eighteenth century; it has been much expanded and altered and today serves as the clubhouse of the Bowie Golf and Country Club. It is one of only two surviving buildings of its type in Prince George's County.

The oldest part of the building is two and one half stories high, with gambrel roof, built of local iron-bearing sandstone painted white. It is roughly 40 by 23-1/2 feet, four bays by two bays, and faces roughly east, with the original entrance in the third bay of the main east facade. This entrance is now hidden by a porch which has been enclosed to form a modern one-story flat-roof lobby; it is sided with white asbestos shingle, and it spans the entire east facade. There are three irregularly spaced shed-roof dormers in the lower east plane of the roof; the dormers enclose 2/2 barred windows. There is an exterior stone chimney centered in the south gambrel end; it has weatherings above the second story windows and is built of brick above the weatherings.

The chimney is flanked by two 4/4 double hung sash windows at second story level, and by two small four-pane single sash windows at third story level. There is an interior flush chimney at the north gambrel end; this north gambrel end is heavily stuccoed and has no openings. The gambrel roof is covered with gray asbestos shingle.

There is a two-story frame gable-roof wing extending west from and at right angles to the main block, built at the beginning of this century. It is two bays by one. Wrapped around the south, west, and north of this wing is a modern flat-roof addition, sheathed with white aluminum siding. The addition continues and wraps around the north gambrel end of the original building; the large northerly section serves now as a restaurant.

Interior of the main block has been greatly altered and modernized. The open-string one-run stair rises along the south wall of the stair hall; it has a slim turned newel, with tapered balusters. Surrounds of doors and windows have modern moldings. In the west wing, doors and windows have plain board surrounds with bullseye corner blocks.

Beneath the south three-quarters of the main block, the stone foundation encloses a cellar. An exterior entrance to his cellar was constructed in 1802 at its southeast corner.

A twentieth century barn, with vertical siding and gambrel roof, stands just north of the unpaved lane which gives access to the property from the Laurel-Bowie Road.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Fair Running (or the Maenner House) is a rare surviving example of an early eighteenth century stone gambrel-roof dwelling. Although it has been substantially expanded and altered to serve as a modern clubhouse, it is an important example of a substantial early house type, and one of only two surviving buildings of this type in Prince George's County.

The house stands on Isaac's Discovery, part of a larger tract patented as Fair Running. The property, 155 acres of Isaac's Discovery, was sold in 1726 to Joseph Peach (I), Schoolmaster, by his father-in-law, Richard Isaac.¹ In the next year, Peach constructed a small stone house, approximately 20 feet by 20 feet, with gambrel roof. It was built of local iron-bearing sandstone and had a full basement under most of the house. [On one of the stones that formed the inner basement wall were scratched the initials (?) P and the number 1727, almost certainly indicating the year of its construction. The former location of this date has been pointed out by elderly members of the Maenner family (the last private owners); this date is no longer visible due to recent alterations in the basement.]

In the years following, Joseph Peach acquired two more tracts which adjoined his home plantation: in 1740, Peach Plains was patented to him for 100 acres²; it lay along the Patuxent River to the east of Isaac's Discovery; in 1749, he purchased from Samuel Farmer 177 acres of Farmer's Reserve³; this tract lay to the north and west of Isaac's Discovery. He was by then a moderately successful planter and was known as such, no longer as a schoolmaster; he had a 432-acre plantation, consisting of the above mentioned three adjoining tracts, as well as several other non-contiguous tracts. When he died in 1764, he devised the three tracts (Farmer's Reserve, Peach Plains and Isaac's Discovery) which made up his plantation to his sons Isaac and John.⁴ John died within a few years of his father, and Isaac deeded to his younger brother, Joseph, half interest in the lands.⁵ Joseph Peach (II) took possession of the plantation.

Joseph Peach (II) died in 1775, leaving the plantation to his son Joseph (III). His will also made it clear that his wife Lucy was to have a home on the plantation as long as she remained a widow, and likewise his surviving brother, Isaac, who had a life estate in the property.⁶

By 1798, when the first Federal Direct Tax Assessment was recorded, Joseph Peach (III) was assessed for a single-story stone dwelling house, 20 foot square, evaluated at $200, and five outbuildings: a kitchen 20' x 16', a negro house 18' x 16', a meat house 16' square, a corn house 20' x 12' and a stable 18' x 12'.⁷

In the next few years Joseph Peach (III) took steps to expand his small stone dwelling. The nature and extent of this addition cannot accurately be determined without more thorough architectural investigation, but the length was increased to its present 40 feet. On a stone in the wall of the exterior basement stairs was carved "Rebuilt 1802". (This date was read and recorded by a member of the Maenner family; it probably can still be seen, but is presently blocked by plumbing and heating facilities in the basement).

At about this time, Joseph Peach (III) applied for a resurvey of this property; the survey was completed in 1802, and the three tracts, Farmer's Reserve, Isaac's Discovery and Peach Plains, were combined into one new tract called Fair Running and patented to Peach in 1813. The total acreage was now 369-1/2 acres, 91-1/4 acres of Peach Plains having been subtracted, and some small pieces of vacant land having been added to the total.⁸ From this point on, the plantation was consistently known as Fair Running, no doubt in reference to the Horsepen Branch which flows through the farm.

Joseph Peach sold the greater part of his plantation (251 acres of Fair Running) to Barton Duvall in 1814,⁹ and the house and 234 acres remained in the Duvall family until 1850. In the small graveyard to the west of the house were buried several members of the Peach and Duvall families. In 1850 the 234 acre farm was sold by Philip and Mary Ann Duvall to Richard and Truman Cross for the use of Elizabeth Page.¹⁰ It is Elizabeth Page's name which appears on the Martenet Map of 1861.¹¹ Mrs. Page's two sons mortgaged Fair Running to Truman Cross in 1874, very soon after which Cross died; the Pages defaulted on their mortgage payments, and Cross' executor sold the property in 1879.¹² (It is the name Slingluff, Cross' executor, which appears on the Hopkins map of 1878.) After two more short term owners, the 234-acre farm and dwelling house were sold to Bernard F. Maenner and his wife, Elizabeth, in 1885.¹³ Thus began the 80 year residence of the Maenner family, last private owners of this historic house.

In the first decade of this century, Bernard F. Maenner constructed the two-story kitchen wing which extends to the rear of the main house, making the house structure T-shaped. It was probably also at this time that the shed dormers were added. His children, and his son's children grew up in this house, and it came to be known by their name, i.e., the Maenner House. The elder Maenner told his children about the Peach/Duvall graveyard a short distance west of the house; although by the time of his death in 1946 the stones were gone, he remembered the names inscribed on them, and made sure that the graveyard site was protected.

In 1965, Bernard F. Maenner (II) and his wife sold the house, with 130 acres, to the Belair Golf and Country Club, and moved into a small house on their adjacent land.¹⁴ Since its acquisition by the club, the house has undergone significant changes. A one-story addition, nearly as deep as the main house, has been built across the entire south facade, providing a lobby and sales room for the club. A one-story addition has also been constructed to the rear and north sides, wrapping around the kitchen wing, and providing a comfortable dining room.

Although the original exterior structure is partially hidden by these additions, and the interior has been extensively renovated, Fair Running remains a very significant historic site. It is one of only two surviving examples of this once popular architectural style in Prince George's County, i.e., stone construction with gambrel roof. The second example, the Hilleary-Magruder House (#69-7), is a larger house, constructed in 1745 on a lot in the newly created Town of Bladensburg. In contrast, Fair Running was constructed as a farm dwelling on a large tract in a rural area. It is certainly the oldest structure in the northern part of Prince George's County, and only the fourth or fifth oldest dwelling house in the entire County.

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITES SUMMARY SHEET

P.G. County Survey # 71B-15 Date 18th, 19th, 20th c.

Building Name Maenner House (Belair Golf Club)

Location Md. Route #197 , Bowie, Md.

Open to Public yes no

The old stone house at Bowie Golf Club has been altered by the addition of a two-story addition at the rear and a one-story shed-roofed additions at the front and rear. The old house has a gambrel roof pierced by three dormers on the front slopes which are not placed symmetrically. The rear roof has only one exposed dormer. The space where the other two probably were located is now covered by the two-story addition. The chimney at the east gable is on the interior while the opposite end of the house has a chimney which is half-inside and half-outside the gable end wall. Both chimneys are located at the ridge. The walls of the house are stone and painted white. There is a cellar under approximately the center third of the house. It has a dirt floor, iron pyrite stone foundation walls, hand-cut beams, and the exposed floor boards of the first floor are about seven inches wide.

Old photographs which were taken before 1960 show the front facade as having four bays with the entrance in the third bay.

The Maenner house is significant even though it has been altered extensively, because the old part represents a type of architecture popular during the eighteenth century of which no other example remains locally. The land is part of the tract Isaac's Discovery which was resurveyed in 1802 as Fair Running. In the 1798 Federal Tax list Joseph Peach was listed as the owner of a stone house at this location which is believed to be part of the present structure.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This house is significant even though it has been altered extensively because the old part represents a type of architecture which was popular in the immediate area during the 18th century and no other example remains there. The land is part of the tract Isaccs Discovery which was resurveyed in 1802 as Fair Running. In the 1790 Federal Tax list Joseph Peach was listed as the owner of a stone house at this location which is believed to be part of the present structure.
