

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey # P.G.#86B-9 Building Date ca.1840's,1927
Building Name Kalaird (Kalmia)
Location 15110 Nelson Perrie Road, in vicinity of Nottingham, Baden

Private / Residence / Occupied / Good / Inaccessible

Description:

Kalaird is a two story, five-by-two bay gable roofed frame dwelling, set on a knoll overlooking extensive surrounding farmland. Its main facade is crossed by a screened entrance porch at the first level and is surmounted by a center front cross gable. The north gable end is dominated by two exterior corbelled brick chimneys connected by a pent.

The overhanging eaves on the building have a heavy, plain boxed cornice with pronounced returns in the gable ends. The building rests on a brick foundation and is covered with white-painted horizontal wood siding. The gable roof is asbestos shingled.

Significance:

Kalaird is significant primarily as a structure with a long history. The first dwelling on the hilltop site dated to at least 1774. The present building is composed of a ca. 1840's main block with a large south addition dating to 1927. Architectural features remaining on the interior and exterior dating to the ca. 1840's dwelling give the building a degree of architectural significance.

Kalaird stands on the division line of two tracts, Retaliation and Masonson, which were patented in 1665 and 1667. John Lawson Brightwell acquired 125 acres of this property, with improvements, in 1774. The property was sold by Brightwell's son to Joseph N. Baden in 1835.

Acreage: 123.6 acres

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Kalaird is a two story, five-by-two bay gable roofed frame dwelling, set on a knoll overlooking extensive surrounding farmland. Its main facade is crossed by a screened entrance porch at the first level and is surmounted by a center front cross gable. The north gable end is dominated by two exterior corbelled brick chimneys connected by a pent.

The five bay west (main) facade has central entrance in the third bay, through a four-panel door flanked by three-light sidelights above wainscot panels and surmounted by a five-light transom. There is a wide, plain board door surround. Windows throughout the building are one-over-one double-hung wood sashes with wide board surrounds surmounted by a raised crown molding.

The south two bays on the facade were added in 1927. There is no break in the horizontal lapped wood siding to indicate the addition. There is also no variation in window size or placement. The first level is six bays, the south three bays being an entrance flanked by two windows, leading into a parlor in the 1927 addition.

The first level of the main facade is sheltered by a five bay screened, hipped roof entrance porch. The porch roof is supported on square pillars set on high brick bases. The main facade is surmounted by abroad, center front cross gable, with a double one-over-one double-hung-sash window centered in it.

The overhanging eaves on the building have a heavy, plain boxed cornice with pronounced returns in the gable ends. The building rests on a brick foundation and is covered with white-painted horizontal wood siding. The gable roof is asbestos shingled.

The three bay north gable end is dominated by two exterior chimneys connected by a one story, shed roof pent containing a small one-over-one double-hung-sash window. The chimneys are corbelled at the top and at the base and have stepped weathering at the second story level. Centered in the upper gable between the chimneys is a double window, similar to that in the cross gable on the main facade.

The five bay east (rear) facade has an entrance in the second bay, into the kitchen, and a central entrance in the fourth bay, the formal rear entrance into the central stair hall. The first four bays of the first story are sheltered by a hipped roof, screened entrance porch, the last bay of which is enclosed by horizontal lapped wood siding. The porch is set on cement block piers. The wide porch frieze is supported on unpainted square wood pillars. A corbelled brick chimney rises from the south end of the east slope.

The two bay south gable end is a part of the 1927 addition to the dwelling. The window treatment, cornice treatment and siding is the same as that on the older portion of the building. The first story is three bays, the second and third bay covered by an enclosed section of the east (rear) porch, which wraps around the south gable end. This enclosed section is set on a cement foundation and contains an enlarged portion of the kitchen and a bath. There are exterior stairs to the partial cellar, beneath this enclosed porch.

The interior plan originally had a south side hall and two north parlors. A south parlor and kitchen were added in 1927, giving the house a central hall flanked by four first story rooms. The open string stair rises along the south wall of the hallway, turns 90 degrees for a landing across the east (back) of the hall and turns 90 degrees once again to rise to the second floor. The stair continues to the partially finished third story, with a landing between the second and third floors. Decorative woodpendants at the stair corners are in the form of small carved acorns. The handrail is of several long curved segments of wood with a oval cross-section. The tapering circular balusters are set two to a step. The outer stair ends have simple, curved bracketing. The spandrel has vertical, rectangular wood wainscoting. A closet beneath the stair is also paneled. It contains a riven clapboard from the early south wing (replaced in 1927 by the present two story addition) which reads "April 1811". There is an exit to the rear porch at the east end of the hall. There is also a door to the cellar beneath the staircase. The cellar, beneath the kitchen only, was added in 1927.

Doors in the old section of the house are four-panel. Doors and windows have two-step architrave surrounds. The chair rail running around the stair hall and the two north parlors has a projecting molding with a center groove surmounting a flat molding with a lower bead. The baseboard, the same on both first and second floors, is unusual in that it is surmounted by an inset rather than a projecting crown molding.

The two north parlors are each warmed by a hearth in the north end wall. The pent which connects the two chimneys contains a closet, reached by a four-panel door to the left of the hearth in the northeast parlor. The deteriorated plaster and exposed, machine-sawn laths in the pent closet appear to be original to the dwelling. The mantels in the north parlor are identical red brick surrounds with walnut mantel shelves. The wood parlor mantels were moved to the new portion of the building and these mantels built in 1949. The wood mantels appear to date to the early 20th. century.

The flooring throughout the older portion of the house is original. The second level contains two north bedrooms above the first story parlors. The mantels in the bedrooms are identical, plain Greek Revival surrounds with flat rectangular pilasters flanking the square hearth opening. The thick mantel shelf has rounded corners. A small room with no hearth is directly opposite the stairway.

The landing between second and third levels crossed a second story window. The third level contains two finished north rooms. The horse hair plaster and exposed machine sawn laths in these rooms are not original to the dwelling. The doors to these two north rooms are of vertical beaded boards with battens crossing the inner side. Opposite the stair is a closet with the front wall and door of narrow vertical wainscoting. The plaster in the hall was installed during the 1927 renovation.

The ca. 1927 portion of the house, on the south side of the stairhall, contains a southwest parlor and a southeast kitchen on the first level. The parlor hearth, on the east (interior) wall has an original wooden mantel from one of the north parlors. The mantel is quite wide with a rectangular opening flanked by tapering slender Doric pillars on base-blocks, supporting the mantel shelf, which has a backboard.

A rear stair rises from the kitchen along the reverse side of the wall that the main stair rises along. Doors in the newer section are one-over-one panel or of five horizontal panels. Door and window surrounds are of wide plain boards with an outer bead.

The rear stair rises to a narrow second floor hall off of which two south bedrooms and a bath open. This hall also can be reached through an entrance from the second floor main stair hall. The southwest bedroom also contains a wood mantel from one of the north parlors. The rectangular hearth opening is flanked by banded rectangular pilasters surmounted by bull's eye corner blocks. The mantel shelf is supported on curved brackets.

The third level of the 1927 addition is a large unfinished south room reached from the third floor stair hall. Siding on the original south gable end is visible above the entrance to this room. The center front cross gable, also added in 1927, can be entered from this room. Original studs for the third floor walls can also be viewed. They appear to be both sawed and hewn, having a sawed surface and a rough hewn surface. Some are entirely hewn. Square cut nails are visible in the timbers.

The house is set on a knoll overlooking the surrounding 124.6 acre agricultural property. The vista over the surrounding fields is outstanding. There are four barns on the rolling terrain to the east (rear) of the house. All were built since the 1920's.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Kalaird is significant primarily as a structure with a long history. The first dwelling on the hilltop site dated to at least 1774. The present building is composed of a ca. 1840's main block with a large south addition dating to 1927. Architectural features remaining on the interior and exterior dating to the ca. 1840's dwelling give the building a degree of architectural significance.

Kalaird stands on the division line of two tracts, Retaliation and Mason-scon, which were patented in 1665 and 1667. 1/ John Lawson Brightwell acquired 125 acres of this property, with improvements, in 1774. The property was sold by Brightwell's son to Joseph N. Baden in 1835. 2/

A ca. 1900 photograph of the west (main) facade of Kalaird depicts a building type commonly constructed in Prince George's County between the years 1840 through 1870. It was a two story frame building with a side gable entrance in the third bay. The entry door is the same as that on the present building. Windows were 6/6 double-hung-sash with louvered shutters. A hipped roof porch with jig-sawn brackets sheltered the first story. The massive exterior north chimneys are visible in the picture.

The south wing in the photograph was removed in 1927 and the building given its present configuration. 3/ The south wing was composed of two low one story sections, one with a slightly higher roofline, joined around a wide central chimney. The small size, roof pitch, large chimney and aged appearance in the photograph indicate a structure that could have dated to the 18th century. It would have been connected with the Brightwell ownership of the property. It is probable that Joseph N. Baden built the main block after acquiring the property in 1835.

Features remaining from the ca. 1840's main block include the exterior chimneys connected by a pent on the north gable end, and the entrance door and surround. On the interior, the stair and balustrade, doors, moldings and Greek Revival bedroom mantels, as well as the flooring are original material.

Kalaird was acquired by J. Benson Perrie in 1896 and has remained in the possession of related family members through the present time. The Perrie family seems to have begun the use of the name Kalaird. Today the property is also known as Kalmia.

In 1927, J. Benson Perrie renovated the house, removing the old south wing and constructing a two story addition containing a parlor and kitchen with two bedrooms and a bath above. New lapped siding was installed on the front and rear elevations to cover the seam of the building addition. A large cross gable was constructed above the main facade and a facade-wide porch installed to shelter the first story. New 1/1 double-hung-sash was installed in all the windows, the end result of the renovation giving the house the appearance of a large, plain 20th century farmhouse.

This large, five-bay, two-and-one-half-story frame house, situated on top of a hill surrounded by farm land is north of Nelson Perrie Road. One large dormer is centered on the south slope of the gable roof. A one-story five-bay screened porch extends across the south front. At the west gable end, there are two large exterior chimneys laid in Liverpool bond, with a brick pent between them which has one tiny window. The house was enlarged to its present appearance in 1927. At that time, the original house was altered by adding two bays to the east end and the dormer and screened porch on the south facade.

Locally, this house is considered something of a landmark because of its age, size, location and visibility. Its chimneys and pent are its most interesting architectural features. A board found in the attic by the present owner has April 1811 written on it; this date is not inconsistent with the architectural details.
