HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #86B-22

Building Date: 1905

Building Name: Crane House

Location: 15101 Candy Hill Road, Naylor

Private/Residence/Occupied/Good/Inaccessible

Description

The Crane House is a gable-roofed frame dwelling which stands on a high maple-shaded lot of land at the crossroads of Naylor. Entrance is in the third bay of the three-bay north facade, through a door with two-light transom. Across this north facade is a one-story hip-roof porch supported by hollow metal fluted columns. There is a semi-circular brick stoop at the door. (An earlier porch was probably supported by bracketed posts similar to those at the Naylor house across the road.) Windows are 2/2 sash, and have black louvered shutters. The original wooden siding is now covered with white aluminum siding; there is no cornice. The roof is covered with black asphalt shingle; there is an interior brick chimney near the east gable end in the north plane of the roof. The foundation is a parged brick, and encloses a full basement. Across the south facade is a one-story addition, an enclosed porch which is now a sun-room and bath. It is seven bays across. Interior consists of an entry/stairhall to the west with open two-flight staircase; the newel post is turned and surmounted by an urn; there are brackets on the stair ends. To the east of the stairhall is a large parlor; Door and window surrounds have multi-groove molding and bulls-eye corner blocks throughout the house. A short distance south of the house is a small gable-roofed outbuilding of twentieth century vintage. To the east is an older board-and-batten shed, in which are some hand hewn beams. To the west is a gable-roofed barn with board-and-batten siding.

Significance

The Crane House is significant for its Victorian vernacular architecture and as a landmark at the Naylor cross roads. It forms the southern boundary of the grouping of late 19th and early 20th century buildings that make up the community of Naylor. The Crane House was built in 1905 for R. Kearney Crane. The house was built on a 64-acre parcel called Lot #1 of Valley Farm. The Valley Farm was a section of the original Brookefield tract which was owned by the Worthington family during the 18th and 19th centuries. Crane sold the property in 1910, and removed from it a number of its moldings, doors and fixtures. The house has had two long term owners during its later 20th century history. The house is significant for its early twentieth century vernacular style, which included Victorian decorative details. It has been altered by the addition of aluminum siding and the modernization of its porch. It is similar in plan to the Naylor house (P.G. #86A-26). Despite alterations, its main facade, roofline, setback, fenestration and rectangular plan identify it as an early twentieth century dwelling. It is a landmark at the Croom and Candy Hill Roads intersection.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Crane House is a gable-roofed frame dwelling which stands on a high maple-shaded lot of land at the crossroads of Naylor. The house is approximately 32 feet square, and faces north towards the old Brandywine-Nottingham Road (Candy Hill Road). Entrance is in the third bay of the three-bay north facade, through a door with two-light transom. Across this north facade is a one-story hip-roof porch supported by hollow metal fluted columns on a brick floor. There is a semicircular brick stoop at the door. (An earlier porch was probably supported by bracketed posts similar to those at the Naylor house across the road.)

Windows are 2/2 double hung sash, and have black louvered shutters on the north and west facades. The original wooden siding is now covered with white aluminum siding; there is no visible cornice. The roof is covered with black asphalt shingle; there is an interior corbelled brick chimney near the east gable end in the north plane of the roof. The foundation is a parged brick, and encloses a full basement.

Constructed in the southerly bay of the west gable end is a one-story hip-roof projecting bay with four windows. Like those of the original house, these windows are 2/2 double hung sash. The foundation of this projecting bay is of poured concrete.

Across the south facade is a one-story addition, an enclosed porch which is now a sun-room and bath. It is seven bays across, with entrance in the fifth bay. Like the projecting bay to the west, this southerly addition rests on a foundation of poured concrete.

Interior consists of an entry/stairhall to the west with open two-flight staircase; the newel post is turned and surmounted by an urn; there are brackets on the stair ends. To the east of the stairhall is a large parlor; at the fireplace in its east wall is a Classical Revival style wooden mantel, with slim colonettes flanking a plain frieze with applied central ornament. Door and window surrounds have multi-groove molding and bulls-eye corner blocks throughout the house.

A short distance south of the house is a small square gable-roofed outbuilding of twentieth century vintage. To the east is an older board-and-batten shed, in which some hand hewn beams are available. To the west of the house, fronting on the gravel drive, is a gable-roofed barn with board-and-batten siding. The grounds slope gently toward a stream to the south, and the high point where the house stands is shaded with many tall maples.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Crane House is significant for its Victorian vernacular architecture and as a landmark at the Naylor cross roads. It forms the southern boundary of the grouping of late 19th and early 20th century buildings that make up the community of Naylor.

The Crane House was built in 1905 for R. Kearney Crane, a resident of Baltimore that married Naylor resident Mary Emily Bourne.¹ The Crane House was built on a 64-acre parcel called Lot #1 of Valley Farm.² The Valley Farm was a section of the original Brookefield tract which was owned by the Worthington family during the 18th and 19th centuries.³

Crane sold the property in 1910, and removed from it a number of its moldings, doors and fixtures.⁴ The house has had two long term owners during its later 20th century history, Clinton Beall and Thomas C. Rawlings. Both farmed the property.

The house is significant for its early twentieth century vernacular style, which included Victorian decorative details. It has been altered by the addition of aluminum siding and the modernization of its porch. It is similar in plan to the Naylor house (P.G. #86A-26) on the northwest corner of the Croom and Candy Hill Road intersection, and probably had a similar porch and cornice treatment. Despite alterations, its main facade, roof-line, setback, fenestration and rectangular plan identify it as an early twentieth century dwelling. It is a landmark at the Croom and Candy Hill Roads intersection and an important member of the grouping of late 19th and early 20th century buildings that compose the Naylor community.
