Crisfield vicinity
private

c. 1835-1850

The William R. Byrd house is one of a handful of antebellum frame houses that survive southeast of Crisfield, an area referred to as "down the neck." The modest two-story, one room plan main block and the story-and-a-half wing retain period features that include nine-over-six sash windows, and an early nineteenth century stair. The house has retained its stepped form. A semi-detached summer kitchen formerly stood to the rear of the dwelling.

Historically, the parcel of ground was part of a larger tract known as "Hills Folly," which was occupied by the Byrd family during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The house is named for William R. Byrd (1829-1887).

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The William R. Byrd house stands on the west side of Birdtown Road southeast of Crisfield, Somerset County, Maryland. The two-story, three-bay frame house faces east with the principal gable oriented on a north/south axis.

Built between 1835 and 1850, this two-story, three-bay frame house is supported by a brick pier foundation and sheathed with asbestos shingles. The medium sloped roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Attached to the south end of the main block is a story-and-a-half frame section and to the rear a modern shed roofed kitchen.

The east (main) facade is an asymmetrical elevation with a side entrance and adjacent nine-over-six sash windows. The replacement door is topped by a closed over three-light transom. Lighting the second floor are three six-over-six sash windows. Finishing the gable roof is a boxed cornice with bed and crown moldings.

The north gable end has two nine-over-six sash windows on each floor and two six-over-six windows light the second floor. A pair of four-pane attic windows light the attic. Rising from the gable end is an interior brick stack topped by a corbelled cap. The bargeboard is molded.

The south gable end is largely covered by the story-and-a-half one-room plan wing. The upper part of the south wall is marked by a pair of four-pane attic windows. The east wall of the wing is a three-bay facade with a center entrance and flanking nine-over-six sash windows. A modern shed roofed stoop covers the entrance bay. The base of the roof is finished with the same boxed cornice.

The south gable end of the wing has two six-over-six sash windows on the first floor and two smaller windows light the half story. Both pairs of windows flank the interior end brick stove stack. The west side of the wing is covered by a modern shed roofed kitchen wing.

The interior of the main house has been moderately remodeled with the addition of sheet paneling over the plaster walls. The period mantel has also been removed. The stair, however, rises against the south wall and retains a slightly turned newel post, rectangular balusters, and an oval profile handrail. The period stair continues to the second floor.
