DESCRIPTION SUMMARY:

This limestone church building displays three periods of construction: 1774, 1867, and 1893. The oldest part of the building is the main block, a south-facing gable-fronted rectangular building. It was placed on a hill at what was then the north edge of Hagerstown. At the south end of town was the north facing St. John's Lutheran Church, so the these two 18th century church buildings appeared like bookends at either end of the town.

In 1867, the present square front bell tower was added apparently replacing an earlier tower. By 1893, the orientation of the entrance had changed, so the church could be entered from N. Potomac Street, rather than from Church Street. This entrance, and additions to the north side are in the Richardsonian Romanesque style. The church yard is enclosed by a stone wall which was constructed in 1834.

This church property is listed in the National Register of Historic Places as part of the Hagerstown Historic District.

History of Construction:

The cornerstone for the new church was laid on the two lots of "God's Acre" on August 10, 1774. The original 40 members bought and paid for the building.

In 1843, seats for black people were designated above the stairs on the north side.

In 1865-65, consideration was given to moving the church. This was decided against and the church was improved to the way it is today, with the tower being rebuilt after storm damage.

Historical Anecdotes:

All the graves face the east side because "the rising sun is a daily reminder of the Resurrection."

In 1863, the tower was used by General Custer to spy on the Southern army during the Civil War.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

In plan, the Zion Evangelical and Reformed Church is basically the Georgian meeting house type; there is a square tower attached to the entrance end of a simple rectangular block. The bulk of the decorative treatment is applied to the tower, only the round head windows relieving the unmitigated cube of the nave. Despite the Georgian plan, the decoration is Romanesque Revival. In addition to the windows already mentioned, there are other Romanesque style windows including the double large one on the front of the tower. The square tower with its tall proportions and crenellated wall is rather English Perpendicular, but the decoration is definitely Romanesque. In fact, the most Romanesque features of the church are the double open arches set within a round arch at belfry level on the tower. The corner strengthening near the top of the tower and the chunky buttressing at the bottom are also Romanesque.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

Replacing an earlier church whose cornerstone was laid in 1774, the Zion Evangelical Church is interesting architecturally as a basically Georgian church handled with Romanesque decoration. Doubly interesting is the fact that this church was built the decade before the Richardsonian Romanesque Revival. Thus an example of Romanesque before Richardson [addition on rear of church shows maturer Romanesque decoration, such as the stubby window columns with their acanthus capitals, and is probably about 1885], this church is not unlike James Windrim's Masonic Hall in Philadelphia.

Zion Church is also important historically to Hagerstown and its cemetery is the resting place of Jonathan Hager.
