

ABSTRACT

66-70 West Washington Street

circa 1820s

Hagerstown

Washington County

Located in a row of late nineteenth and early twentieth century buildings, this Federal style house, erected about the 1820s, is one of the oldest structures in Hagerstown's central area. Constructed of brick, the house is two and a half stories high and has internal, double-end chimneys and two pedimental gable dormers on the front(south side). The facade has Flemish brick bonding and the original symmetrical arrangement of five windows on the second floor. Although the first floor of the facade and much of the interior have been altered several times, the building retains its basic configuration and most of the exterior decorative detailing.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The building stands at 66-70 West Washington Street in Hagerstown, Washington County, and is located on the north side of the street in the western half of the block formed by Public Square and Jonathan Street.

The building is an early nineteenth century, rectangular shaped, Federal style, painted brick structure with a gable roof. It sits tight to the sidewalk and neighboring buildings and has an ell extending out of the back (north side) along the west property line. The structure is two and a half stories high and has a symmetrical facade (south side), internal double-end chimneys and parapets along the east and west side walls, and two pedimental gable dormers on the front. The bricks of the facade are laid in Flemish bond and the roof, with an east/west axis, is covered with asphalt shingles.

The facade (south side) has undergone the usual first floor commercial alterations but the upper level and a half are fairly original. The first floor has two mid-late twentieth century stone fronts with a centered doorway leading to the upper stories. The second floor has five windows, each with double-hung, wooden sashes, one-over-one lights, narrow frames, and flat arches. The window frames are probably original and one of the type commonly found on early nineteenth century houses in Hagerstown. A small molded cornice runs along the facade under the roof overhang.

The two roof dormers are, for the most part, probably original. Each has double-hung, wooden sashes with multiple lights. The top sashes are round and the panes are arranged in a semicircular pattern. The windows are flanked by slender, plain attached columns resting on plinths.

The building appears to be structurally sound although it is in need of basic repairs. A more sympathetic first floor facade and installation of multipane sashes in the windows above would help to restore this building to its original appearance.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This early nineteenth century Federal style house is one of the oldest structures in Hagerstown's central area. Erected about the 1820s, the building serves as an important historical artifact recording the social and cultural development of the community.

Although the whole history of the building is not understood, current analysis indicates that it was probably erected as a dwelling during a period of economic prosperity in western Maryland. Hagerstown was located at the crossroads of two major routes of migration, present U.S. Routes 40 and 11, and witnessed a period of building activity of which this structure is an example. By the late 1800s, the entire first floor was being used for commercial purposes as has been the case ever since. Through the change in use and several alterations to the street level facade, the building has remained intact remarkably well both in configuration and exterior decoration (see description).

The building stands on the eastern half of Lot No. 81 as designated on the Hagerstown plat. Most of the nineteenth century deeds note that a springhouse on the property extended about four inches to the east on to the neighboring property.

Mid to late nineteenth century photographs of Hagerstown indicate that the streets of the central area were once lined with houses similar to this one. One example which has remained fairly unaltered, even more than this house, is located at 148-152 West Washington Street. Known as the Kneisley Building, the house is three bays across the facade but has similar dormers.

66-70 West Washington Street is well worthy of restoration and could be a "jewel" in the central area, particularly in relationship to the late nineteenth and early twentieth century buildings surrounding it.

Although 66-68 West Washington Street has suffered the usual first floor commercial alteration, the rest of the building shows a Federal period urban dwelling type of structure very similar to 141 South Potomac Street. Identical in its five bay facade and double end chimneys, 66-68 West Washington does have two dormers on the roof which appear to be original. With pedimental gable roof and flanking pilasters, the window sash of the dormers has a round top and panes arranged in a semi-circular pattern.

Last building of age or style on this part of West Washington Street.
