First National Bank Building

circa 1910

101 West Washington Street

Hagerstown

Washington County

Located on a prominent corner site across from the courthouse, this one story high, white marble Classical style building was erected in the early twentieth century for a bank. It is identified in a 1913 newspaper as the People's Bank^{Building}. The structure was later occupied by the Nicodemus National Bank from whom the present owners acquired it. Although enlarged and somewhat altered over the years, the building still retains much of the original decorative detailing in the round arch windows and the roof balustrade above the cornice.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
The First National Bank Building stands at 101 West Washington Street in Hagerstown, Washington County, and is located on the southwest corner of the intersection of Washington Street and Summit Avenue. The building is an early twentieth century, one story high, white marble Classical style structure. It has a closed roof balustrade with turned balusters, a dentilled cornice, large round arch windows with keystones along the north and east elevations, and a rounded northeast corner which originally was a columned doorway. The original building which consisted of two windows along Washington Street (north side) and four windows along Summit Avenue (east side) was enlarged on the west and south sides in recent years. These additions are not stylistically sympathetic to the original design but are tied into it through their marble facings.
