Late 19th Century

Schnebly Farm

Maugansville - State Line Vicinity

private

This turn of the century neo-colonial farmhouse reflects a type of building popular throughout the eastern United States during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Patterned after the 18th century Georgian houses, this building has a formal exterior arrangement and a hipped roof. Its design is eclectic, however, in its use of gothic dormers. The barn and outbuildings appear to be contemporary with the house.

This property was known as the "Schnebly Farm" which was owned during the mid 18th century by Henry Snively (Schnebly).

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This neo-colonial brick farmhouse, its barn and outbuildings are located on the west side of Maugansville Road about one half mile south of the Mason-Dixon Line in Washington County, Maryland.

The two and one half story, five bay house rests on low stone foundations on level ground and faces east. It has a hipped roof which rises to a short ridge trimmed with a row of scalloped metal work.

Windows and doors appear to be grouped evenly in the walls. They have single pane double hung sashes. Set in the east slope of the roof are three dormers with steeply pitched gables. The windows in the dormers have single pane lower sashes topped with pointed arched windows with curved muntins.

The main entrance is located in the center bay of the front elevation. Held within paneled jambs are the door and a three light transom. A porch supported by round doric pillars extends across the front elevation. Centered in the second story at the front elevation is a door opening onto the porch roof. It is topped with a semi-circular fan light.

The roof of the house is sheathed with slate, having decorative bands laid in an imbrical pattern. Eaves at the front elevation are finished with a course of modillions. Twin brick chimneys rise from inside the south end wall.

Until recently a one story dependency was located south of the main block.

Behind the house is a large frame bank barn which faces south. Its end walls are pierced with louvered ventilators with pointed architraves. Various other outbuildings are located nearby.

The structures are in excellent condition and stand on a farm containing 97 acres.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This turn of the century neo-colonial farmhouse reflects a type of building popular throughout the eastern United States during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Patterned after the 18th century Georgian houses, this building has a formal exterior arrangement and a hipped roof. Its design is eclectic, however, in its use of gothic dormers. The barn and outbuildings appear to be contemporary with the house.

This property was known as the "Schnebly Farm" which was owned during the mid 18th century by Henry Snively (Schnebly). During the late 19th century, the farm was acquired by Cora A. Teisher who in 1890 married Edward A. Fleming. After Cora Fleming's death, the farm was sold in 1914 to Jonas Eshleman for $18,000. (144/620). In 1950, the heirs of Jonas Eshleman sold the farm to its present owners.
