Description:

This frame house was probably built in two parts. It is covered with imitation stone insul siding. What appears to be the older section is the east and has three bays with a central entrance. To this section is added a two story, two bay addition, to make the entire structure five bays wide. A shed roofed porch supported by square posts extends across the entire front elevation. Entrances are located in the second and fourth bays from the east end of the house. Windows have single pane sash.

A house was located on this property in 1877 according to the Atlas. It was owned by P. Rumberger.
