Description:

Now the Funkstown Town Hall, this building formerly served the congregation of the German Reformed Church. It is a gable-fronted Romanesque Revival style brick structure. Bricks are laid in common bond at all elevations. The front elevation is distinguished by extensive corbeling with recessed sections, crenelation and round arched window "shoulders." Openings are fully round arched. The main entrance is in the central bay in a projecting pavilion with a steeply pitched gabled roof. Atop the roof at the front of the building is a square bell tower with round arched openings and a concave hipped roof.

The German Reformed Church together with the Lutheran Church established a Union Church on Cemetery Street in 1771. The church served both congregations until 1850 when the union between the two congregations was dissolved. The Lutherans built a church on East Baltimore Street, just west of this building. The Reformed congregation stayed in the old log church until 1859 when the structure was destroyed by fire.
