DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Ditto Farm is located on the Ditto Farms Regional Park property along the north side of Landis Road, about half a mile west of White Hall Road in Washington County, Maryland. The house is situated near a small spring-fed stream and faces south.

The dwelling is a five-bay, two story brick structure with a two-bay, one-story brick ell extending to the north or rear of the main section. The walls are set on low limestone foundations at the front elevation, which become considerably higher at the rear of the house and the ell.

Bricks of the front elevation are laid in Flemish bond while other walls display a type of common bonding unusual for Washington County, consisting of three courses of stretchers between header rows. A water table capped with quarter round molded brick extends along the facade. Flat brick arches present over the openings diminish in height from 1 1/2 bricks at the first story to 1/2 brick at the attic level.

Windows appears to be spaced symmetrically in the facade. The six over six light double hung sashes are held within narrow frames, which appear to be replacements of wider, more massive frames. Few windows spaced at random are present in the rear elevation.

The main entrance is located in the center bay of the facade. The unusual nine panel door is topped by a four light transom and is flanked by paneled jambs. The doorway is, however, quite simple in its appearance. In the rear elevation of the main section is a door which retains its original wide wooden frame with pegged joining.

A three-bay, one story entrance porch with a hipped roof shelters the central bays of the facade. It is supported by round doric style pillars.

The roof is covered with corrugated sheet metal and is finished at the gables with a tapered barge board which narrows to the roof peak. The eaves boxing is finished with a band of simple molding. Brick chimneys with corbeled caps are located inside each gable end and inside the end of the ell. The chimney in the ell was heightened at a later time. The house is in fair condition and appears structurally sound.

East of the house is a large stone end bank barn set parallel to Landis Road. This undated structure appears typical of stone barns built during the first half of the nineteenth century. It is in fair to good condition.

A 19th century springhouse exists on the property of no historic interest.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Ditto Knolls is one of two historic farm complexes in the 311.17 acre Ditto Farm Regional Park which will, in addition to recreational activities, interpret farming in Western Maryland. Ditto Knolls and the Henry McCauley Farm (see separate National Register nomination) will be restored as a part of the park. Ditto Knolls is important for its architecture and its contribution to Washington County history.

Architecturally Ditto Knolls is a significant example of the construction patterns of Washington County and western Maryland where stone and brick were important building materials. This property is an unusually early example of the County's brick architecture. Several features of this house - water table, Flemish bond brickwork on the facade used in combination with a common bond of three courses of stretchers between header rows, taped barge board, and wide pegged door frame - are associated with 18th and very early 19th century structures in Washington County. Built with five bays and a center main entrance, it is representative of a major type of building in western Maryland and the Cumberland Valley derived from the Georgian style Brick houses built, as this one was, prior to 1820 are rare in the County.

The large stone end bank barn is a well preserved example of regional agricultural construction.

The property was owned through most of its history by the McCauley family, prominent farmers in the County. The McCauley family at the same time owned the McCauley Farm the second historic complex in the park.

In 1847 Samuel McCauley bought what is now Ditto Knolls from Catherine McCra who had inherited the farm from Michael Fernsler. Fernsler acquired the property in two transactions from Wendel Gilbert (also spelled Sibert) in 1791 and 1794. Either Fernsler or Gilbert is the probable builder of Ditto Knolls.

The lands making up this farm to include parts of the original property Meshek's Garden, Resurvey On Old Fox Deceived and Cobbler's Hall.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The area of significance of this house is its architecture. Although its exact construction date has not been determined, the house would appear to be an early example of the County's brick architecture. Features such as the Flemish bond facade, the watertable and the tapered barge board would tend to support an early building date, perhaps the late 18th or early 19th century.

Built with five bays and a center main entrance, it is representative of a major type of building in Western Maryland and the Cumberland Valley.

The house is worthy of further examination and consideration for restoration.
