Description

Said to be a Sears catalogue house, this American Foursquare follows the typical plan, with a two bay facade and a hipped roof. Front windows are paired or tripled and the main entrance is located in the north side bay of the front. A hipped roof porch supported by brick piers extends across the front. A shed dormer extends from the front face of the roof. The exterior has been resurfaced with aluminum siding.

The American Foursquare was typical of residential development of the 1920s.
