DOUBLE CABIN

Willows

early 20th century

Private

This survey has taken note of a number of three bay wide, one deep, single story cabins. They are usually covered with simple overlapping clapboards, have gable-end roofs and rest on pilings of some sort. For the most part, these cabins are dwellings for black farm workers.

An example is this building here which is unusual only in that it is rather long.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Two attempts failed at gaining entry or any other information about this building other than what is revealed by photographs.

A break in the simple overlap siding and a second entrance of smaller dimension in the east side suggest that a smaller cabin was enlarged. The apparent symmetry of the windows in both the east and west sides, however, does not indicate enlargement therefore suggesting the possibility of a "duplex".

This possibility is further suggested by the central flu chimney which is presumably for wood or coal stoves.

The siding and roofing, 6/6 windows and stove chimney suggest a late 19th, but most likely, are Early 20th Century building date.
