This house faces northeast onto Maryland Route 765. It is a heavily altered latenineteenth-century wood-framed, two-story, two-room-plan structure. The original fenestration, on the second story of the facade suggests that the structure had a side-passage-parlor plan. The original windows have six-over-six double-hung sash. On the gable ends, the smaller original windows have four-over-four windows. Probably when the dwelling was converted to an office, the first-story fenestration of the facade was altered to include only two modern windows. The entrances to the original parts of the structure are located on the gable ends. The original weatherboarding has been replaced with asbestos siding. The most distinctive decorative feature is the sawn scalloped boards applied to the eaves. Additions include a rear two-story shed, a one-story shed built onto the southeast gable end, and a one-story gable-roofed wing added to the northwest gable end.
