This early twentieth-century Colonial Revival house faces west onto Maryland Route 765. Set on a decoratively molded concrete-block foundation, it is a two-story double-pile, side-passage plan framed and weatherboarded house with a gable roof. There is no cornice -- the rafter ends are exposed. There is an exterior brick chimney on the south gable end. The facade is composed of a side door sheltered by a pedimented stoop and a bank of three windows. There are two single bays on the second story. The windows are glazed with six-over-six sash. There is a one-story two-bay shed addition on the south gable end of the house.
