St. Paul's Wesleyan Church
Oxford
Private

1865, 1883, 1906, 1991

Prominently situated along Morris Street at its intersection with South Street is the St. Paul's Wesleyan Church, a historic structure erected by Oxford's Methodist Episcopal congregation in several stages during the mid to late nineteenth century. E. C. Hallman's compendium history of Methodist churches states that the congregation erected the initial gable front frame structure in 1865 and improved it several times over the course of the following half century. The low pitched gable roof, the wide corner pilasters, and the dentiled cornice evident on the side and rear elevations reflect the mid century date of the original church. According to Hallman's record significant improvements were made in 1882 at a cost of $2,300, a sum that financed the substantial addition of cross wings to either side of gable-front entrance that supported a tall steeple. During the first decade of the twentieth century another wave of improvements were made that included a series of memorial windows along with a redecoration of the interior. In 1906 a committee that included F. L. Corkran, J. R. Sherbrook, W. R. Moore, Howard Bridges, David Pritchard, J. A. Delahay, and M. G. Newnam and Thomas Kugler was formed to oversee the series of improvements. The installation of the decorative metal walls and ceiling was awarded to the Penn Metal Company of Philadelphia, and Thomas Kugler supplied the artistic painting skills.

In 1940 the Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant churches merged, and united congregations worshiped in the Methodist Protestant building located in the center of town. In 1948 the Methodist Episcopal church was sold to the Pilgrim

Holiness congregation for $7000.

The Pilgrim Holiness congregation used the old Methodist church for several years, however lightening struck the steeple in 1960, which destroyed the steep pyramidal spire. In its place a squat, truncated tower was rebuilt. In 1979 the church property was acquired by Ted and Jennifer Stanley with a plan to preserve the historic structure that stands in front of their property on South Street. In 1990-91 the Stanleys hired Joseph Balderson, a local ship builder and carpenter to re-erect the lost steeple

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

St. Paul's Wesleyan Church, also known as St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, stands on the northeast corner of the intersection of South Morris and South streets in the southern residential district of Oxford, Talbot County, Maryland. The single story church faces west with the principal gable roof oriented on an east/west axis.

The current form of the church, which follows a cross plan, was achieved in two principal stages during the mid to late nineteenth century. The main body of the church, which is a rectangular gable-roofed structure, dates to 1865 and exhibits some modest Greek Revival detailing. The front addition to the mid century church, which has a story-and-a-half elevation that extends to each side with lateral wings and a front vestibule, was erected in 1883. The late nineteenth century addition included a tall spire that was reduced in size after lightning struck it in 1960. In 1990 the tower and its spire was restored to the building. The cross shaped church is supported on a low brick foundation, and the exterior is clad with a combination of plain weatherboards and German siding. The medium pitched roofs are sheathed with asphalt shingles.

The west (main) elevation is a symmetrical facade with a projecting center vestibule and entrance designed in the Gothic Revival style. A pointed arch entrance is fitted with double doors executed in Gothic inspired carpentry. Fixed atop the double doors is a colored glass transom with the St. Paul's Wesleyan Church name executed in the pattern of glass. The vestibule is covered by a steeply pitched roof fitted with extended eaves and a decorative sawnwork finial. Triangular brackets fit under the lower corners of the eave. The vestibule is centered on the three-bay facade, and the center bay projects slightly forward of the lateral bays. Enhancing the center bay is a pediment front trimmed with brackets and pierced by a round windows. The decorative eave brackets extend around the sides of the lateral bays. Gothic arched lancet windows mark the wall surfaces on each side of the center entrance. Each gable end of the lateral bays is pierced by a narrow lancet window, and the gable end is enclosed within a small pediment.

Each side of the church is defined by a series of rectangular colored glass windows, and the base of the roof is trimmed with a boxed cornice enhanced by a dentiled bed molding and Greek Revival crown. Plain corner pilasters trim the corners of the church.

The rear wall features a five-side apse, which is pierced on two sides by rectangular colored glass windows. The apse is topped by a five-sided conical roof. Piercing the wall to each side are rectangular colored glass windows. The edge of the roof is finished with an extended eave with short returns.

The interior is elaborately finished with a pressed metal ceiling and walls. The interior was not fully inspected at the time of survey.

A GRACEFUL STEEPLE RETURNS IN OCTOBER

Entering Oxford from the land side, look up on the right from Morris and South Streets to see an old white clapboard church now being returned to its original shape. The steeple of the now inactive St. Paul's Wesleyan church has been rebuilt to follow early photographs and will be hoisted in place this October.

~~about~~ Before 1858
Originally built in 1860, the church has a colorful history as described in "Oxford: The First Three Centuries" by Dickson Preston and Norman Harrington.

Struck by lightning in 1960, the steeple burned and was then replaced by a smaller and simpler structure. It no longer had a minister or congregation when it was purchased by a local couple in 1979.

Less than a year ago, Joe Balderson, who attended services at the church as a boy and whose family have lived in Oxford since 1921, came to the present owners and asked if they might like to have the original steeple rebuilt. A fine carpenter and respected wooden boat builder, his suggestion was enthusiastically received. He has reproduced the tall graceful spire nearby and will add the original railing to encircle the steeple at the level of joining. Some of the unique tools he uses belonged to his grandfather.

One modern concession is being made in the interest of building preservation: a lightning rod will be installed. This will bring the church and steeple with rod to a height of more than 70 feet from the ground, which will provide a soaring inspirational sight for passersby.

The building's original rear section appears to be in the earlier Greek Revival style with a low pitched roof and precise dentil trim on three sides. A rear bay may have been added. The front addition sports a carpenter's lace decorative finial and Gothic Revival trefoils, crossbraced at the center gabled entrance, while the entire building displays large Gothic, or pointed, windows.

A second front gable, behind the entrance high point is decorated with delicate Second Empire support brackets. An oversize oriel window featuring alternating red and blue stained glass petal panels, is centered in this second gable directly behind the white lacy finial.

The overall Victorian style of the little church is Queen Anne, which mixes period designs of American homes built between 1840 and 1910. Much of the Carpenter Gothic trim is of local design called vernacular and may be reproduced in nearby Victorian trim which was often added to much earlier homes to update them.

The church is owned and being restored to its former style by Ted and Jennifer Stanley of Oxford.

Fanny Lowe Memorial Methodist Protestant Church. See Lowe Memorial.

Fairbanks Methodist Episcopal Church, located on Tilghman's Island, at the southern point. They began to hold Sunday School there about 1880. In 1884, they began talking of erecting a new church. It was not until 1891 that the church was completed, under the ministry of J. M. Lindale, at a cost of $1,200. In 1930, they spent $4,755 to improve the building. At the outbreak of World War II, the high wages of Baltimore's war industries, caused an exodus of the inhabitants and the village was practically deserted, the church being closed at that time. The village continues to be deserted, up to this date.

Ferry Neck Methodist Episcopal Church bought its land of Henry Colson, and it was deeded to the following trustees: Spedden Orem, John W. Battie, John Harris, and Arthur Rigby. This church is located near Bellevue. It was built in 1817, and was the fourth house erected by the Methodists in the County. We do not know when they built the second church, but the record says it was rebuilt in 1856; repaired in 1887, and also in 1909. By 1933, it was a closed church, having an occasional anniversary service.

King's Creek Methodist Episcopal Church, dates back to early Methodism, but facts are scarce and information uncertain. We do know that by 1800, the church was built. It must have been erected much earlier than that. See Matthew for additional information.

Lebanon Methodist Episcopal Church. See Trappe.

Landing Neck Methodist Episcopal Church, whose origin and history is hard to discover, gave to Missions in 1883. They built a new church in 1909, at a cost of $1,600. All information leads us to believe that it was one of the early stands of Methodism in Talbot County.

Longwood Methodist Episcopal Church was erected by the Rev. Magee about 1870. It was closed in 1873, and reopened for a short season in 1875.

Fanny Lowe Memorial Protestant Church was the direct result of Miss Lowe becoming interested in a neglected field. She personally collected the funds, supervised the erection, and was the mainstay of the organization. The church was dedicated in 1915, and cost $3,600. The organ cost $2,000 and was installed in 1918. Southerland Methodist Protestant Church, when the organization ceased to function, purchased the building.

Matthews Methodist Episcopal Church, the successor of King's Chapel. The corner stone was laid for this building August 12th, 1877. The church was dedicated Dec. 23rd, 1877; E. L. Hoffecker was the pastor. It was improved in 1907, 1916, and 1917.

Miles (or Myles) River Neck Church, Methodist Episcopal, located two miles east of Tunis Mills. Thomas Smith preaches there Oct. 3rd, 1804, and says there was a large congregation. They evidently changed sites, for they purchased a new lot in 1881, upon which a church was soon thereafter erected. The church was closed in 1937, and permission was granted the superintendent to sell the church in 1940.

Neavitt Methodist Episcopal Church, formerly Chatham's Chapel. Chatham's was enlarged in 1888 at a cost of $1,050. In 1921, they removed the old Chapel to the town of Neavitt, turned it around, and built a Sunday School room and called it Neavitt Methodist Episcopal Church. The cost of the project was $4,677.

Oxford Methodist Episcopal Church, St. Paul's by name, was erected in 1865. The improvements occurred in 1882, at a cost of $2,300; in 1893, at a cost of $550; and in 1907, at a cost of $2,300. In 1940, the Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant societies in Oxford, united, and they used the Methodist Protestant building. The Episcopal church was destroyed by fire and they are now using the former St. Paul's as a place of worship, until such time as they are able to rebuild.

Oxford Methodist Protestant Church was built about the year 1859. In 1911, they bought a lot and moved the church to a new location, at a cost of $1,100. They spent another $1,100 in improving the church in 1927. When Unification brought the two Methodist churches together, the St. Paul's society came down to the Methodist Protestant Church, and are using this as the auditorium and Sunday School room.

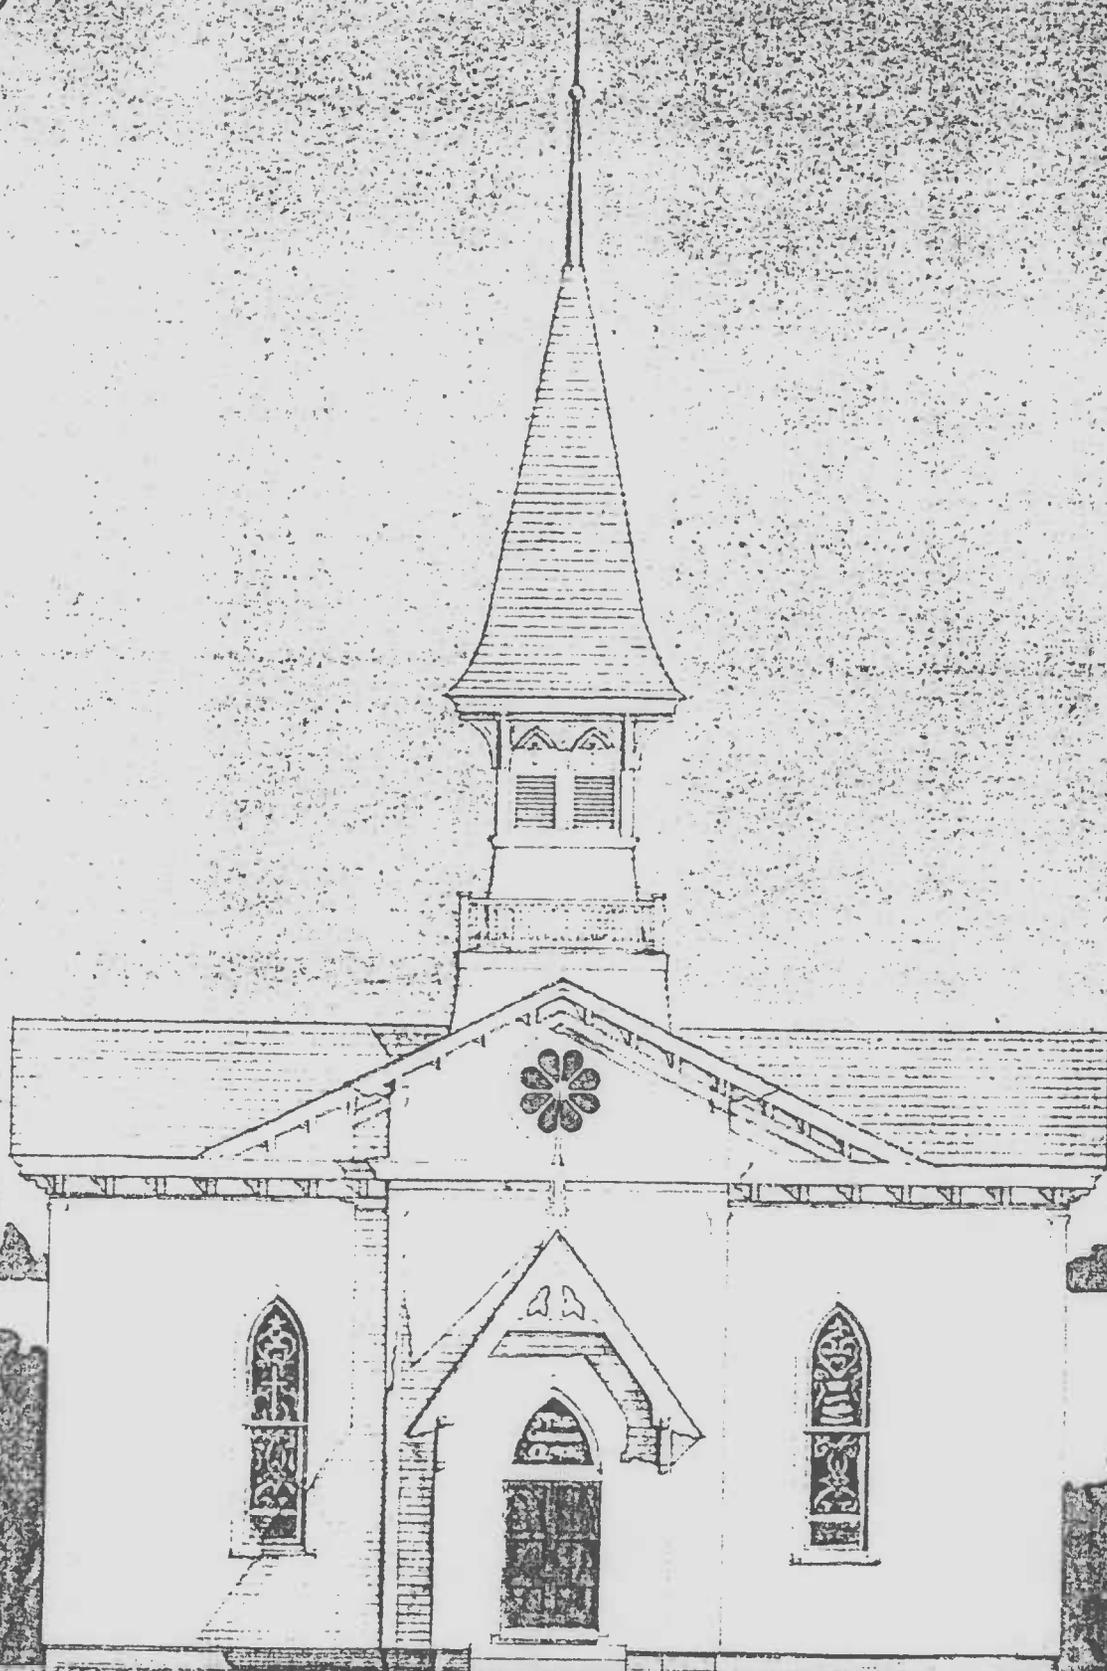

Pea Neck Methodist Episcopal Church, near St. Michaels was organized in 1898, and built the church the following year.

Royal Oak Methodist Episcopal Church. The first meeting house was erected about a mile above Royal Oak in the year 1808, upon land acquired from Henry Banning, at whose home, preaching had been heard for many years. The names of the trustees: Arthur Rigby, Thomas Townsend, Joseph Esgate, Joseph Hopkins, Charles Rigby, James Jones, and Richard Dawson. A new church was erected in 1846. This continued to be used until they dedicated another church in 1911, at a cost of $3,000.

Royal Oak Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Have been unable to have letters of inquiry answered, nor could we learn any of its history.

Sherwood Methodist Episcopal Church, whose church organization was the result of a meeting held in a tent in 1886 by Rev. J. A. Reese. The first church was dedicated in the year 1888. Their second church was erected in 1924 and was improved in 1936. The cost of the church when it was built in 1924 was $3,500. This church was improved in 1936 at a cost of $1,100, being dedicated on Oct. 25th of that year. The social hall was built in 1916, at a cost of $600. Note: The village of Sherwood has the unique distinction of having most of its inhabitants graduates of some college. There is established there Rowleson Print Shop, who has built up an outstanding mail order business. The Harrison's Brothers discovered how to can fish, as well as the agricultural products, and have establishments in several other localities. The Village is mostly made up of these two families plus their in-laws. It was one of the ancestors of the Harrisons that entertained and threw open their barn for the earliest of the Methodist preachers.

St. Michael's Methodist Episcopal Church, Sardis by name, was organized by William Watters in 1779. There has been an appointment in the town since 1777. The deed for their land is dated 1781. On June 25th of that year, James Braddock conveyed unto James Benson, Robert Lambdin, John Kersey, Thomas Harrison, Richard Parrott, Joseph Harrison, Daniel Danny, John MacDonald, and Daniel Fairbanks, trustees; the lot upon which the church was erected. The church was built that year. Another church was erected in 1873, and was dedicated May 14th, 1874. This church was improved in 1887 at a cost of $2,000; in 1914 at a cost of $1,350, and a heating plant was placed in the church in 1925 at a cost of $2,300. They built a Sunday School room annex, in 1894 at a cost of $2,500. Improvements, in addition to those already mentioned, of $10,114 were placed on the building in 1942. In 1944, they spent an additional $2,647. Fire did considerable damage to the boiler room and the Sunday School annex in 1945. This was covered by insurance. It so happens that Freeborn Garrettson was their pastor when he was sent "like an arrow" to call the preacher to the Christmas Conference of 1784, which organized the Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

This church, located at the entrance to Oxford, exhibits several elements of the stick style, particularly in the decoration of the entrance and steeple. It has a T plan and, unlike most churches, the entrance is located between the transepts at the top of the nave where the chancel is normally found. The entrance is treated in an elaborate fashion, with a gable-roofed vestibule surmounted by an ornate pinnacle, behind which rise a gable with rose window and a pyramidal steeple. It served as the Methodist church in Oxford until 1948, when it became the Pilgrim Holiness Church.

NEW CHURCH DEDICATED.

St. Paul's M. E. Church, Oxford, reopened on Sunday Last.

St. Paul's Church was formally re-opened for service on Sunday, July 22, after having been closed for several months for repairs. In its interior and exterior, there has been a complete transformation. "All things have become new." Eighteen new windows, most of them beautiful 'memorials' have been placed in the church. A new acetylene gas plant has taken the place of the old method of lighting, and nine beautiful chandeliers now throw out a clear and mellow light. The floors are newly carpeted.

The front of the church is Romanesque in its style of architecture, and walls and ceiling are finished with steel, decorated by artists from Philadelphia. All who have seen it are nustinted in their praise, and many assert that it is the most attractive one on the peninsula.

The building committee consisted of the following named: Chairman, Frank L. Corkran; Secretary, J. E. Sheubrook; Decorator, Thos. Kugler; W. R. Moore, Howard Bridges, David Pritchard, J. A. Delahay and W. G. Newman. When it came time to look after the finances, every committeeman was at his post, and did his full duty.

Others of the church were equally self-sacrificing, loyal and devoted. All recognized the debt of gratitude due to Frank L. Corkran for the financial support which made it possible to carry on and complete the enterprise. May he live long, and have the happiness of building a new church and a parsonage.

At the services, Rev. Dr. W. G. Koons preached in the morning and Rev. G. W. Bounds at night. The influence and ministries of these brethren was a great uplift. Rev. W. S. Haaks, resident minister, was present and conducted devotional services. Rev. Dr. W. T. Lewis the pastor, took care of the finances and his success was almost phenomenal. — $2200 had been spent in remodeling, $1900 was speedily subscribed. It was a great victory. Pastor and people now confidently walk together "in confident hope"

FROM THE EASTON STAR, 1906:

FEBRUARY 3 St. Paul's Church has appointed the following energetic committee to remodel, repair and renovate the church edifice, namely: Messrs. F. L. Corkran, J. R. Sherbrook, W. R. Moore, Howard Bridges, David Pritchard, J. A. Delahay, and M. G. Newnam. Mr. Thomas Kugler was appointed a committee of one on interior decoration.

FEBRUARY 17 The Penn Metal Company of Philadelphia has been awarded the contract to complete the walls and ceiling of St. Paul's Church.

FEBRUARY 24 Workmen are in possession of St. Paul's ME Church.

MARCH 3 The Methodists are meeting in the I O R M hall while they are roofless and homeless.

MARCH 24 The Penn Metal Ceiling Co. deserves all praise for the good work done in St. Paul's Church, and their careful superintendents Messrs. P M F Mallory and J. Meconohey deserve special mention for completing their work in a most artistic manner

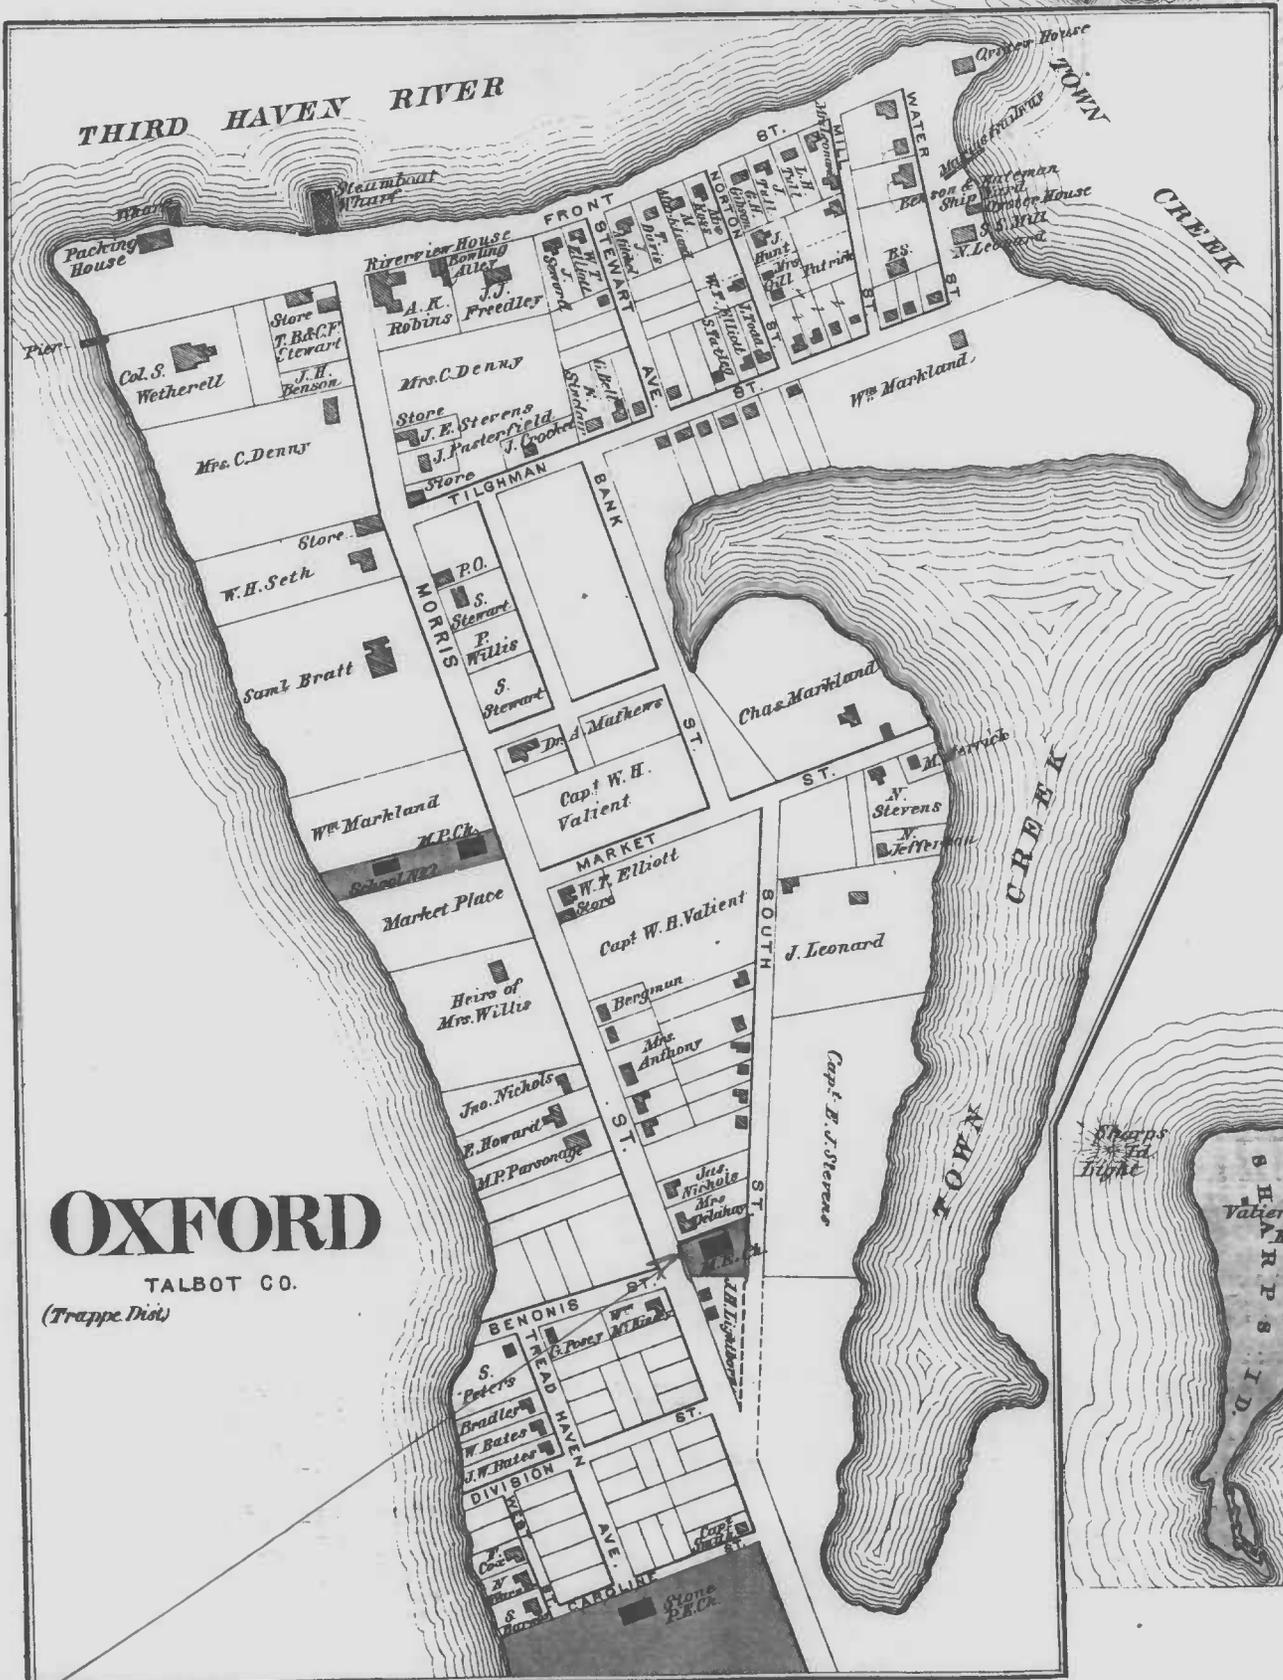

If one would see an artist at work look in on Mr. Kugler as he handles his brush at St. Paul's Church

April 14. At least 9 memorial windows will be placed in St. Paul's M E Church.

MAY 12 St. Paul's will have a window dedication service.
