Friendly Hall

Circa 1845 -1855

Friendly Hall is significant as a fine example of ante-bellum architecture in St. Mary's County. The structure has a high level of architectural integrity, retaining its original exterior siding, fenestration pattern, interior plan, and Greek Revival finishes. Occupied until the 1960s, it is now used for storage and has begun to fall into disrepair.

George S. Mattingly purchased this property from Jeremiah Alvey sometime prior to 1845. While notes by St. Mary's County historian Charles Fenwick describe the construction date as 1855, Fenwick documents no source for this date. The oldest section of the house is its main block and kitchen wing. The hyphen appears to have been added at a later date. Perhaps the house's most striking exterior feature is its two-story porch on the south elevation which is finished with an unusual star-burst pattern baluster on the second floor.

Friendly Hall is located at the end of an unpaved road on the east side of Doctor Johnson Road in St. Mary's County, Maryland. The house is currently enclosed by a barbed wire fence. Cattle graze in the grassy area surrounding the house. A one-story meat house stands east of the structure. Other outbuildings, including two sheds and a tobacco barn are located nearby. On the south side of Friendly Hall, the landscape slopes towards an old road bed which runs east/west. Southeast of the road bed stands a modern ranch style house which is the home of Friendly Hall's current owners. Friendly Hall faces north with the principal gable oriented on an east/west axis.

Constructed in the 1840s, the main block of Friendly Hall is a frame, two-story, five-bay structure with a center hall, double pile plan. It is supported by a continuous brick foundation and sheathed with weatherboard siding. The roof is covered with metal. To the east of the main block extends a one-story hyphen and a one-and-a-half story kitchen wing, both covered with weatherboard siding and roofed with metal shingles.

The north (main) elevation of the house consists of a center six-panel door with a three-light transom window flanked on either side by two windows hidden behind louvered shutters. The windows on this elevation have narrow, beaded surrounds. The center door is sheltered by a flat roof portico supported by square posts and finished with slender, square balusters. The portico is supported by cinderblocks and mortared brick piers. The portico ceiling is wainscoated and the roofline is finished with a boxed cornice. The second floor of the main block is lit by four shuttered windows and a center door which once opened onto the roof of the entrance portico. The one-story hyphen which extends to the east is supported by a cinderblock foundation. It is pierced by a window now covered with a sheet of corrugated metal. The hyphen cornice is boxed. The one-and-a-half story kitchen wing to the east of the hyphen is supported by a cinderblock foundation. This north elevation is pierced by a central vertical panel door with a narrow beaded surround flanked on either side by a window opening now covered with a sheet of corrugated metal. The kitchen wing roofline is finished with a boxed cornice.

The east elevation of the kitchen wing is pierced by two four-pane windows at its upper half story. A centrally placed brick chimney stands against the exterior of this flush gable end elevation. The main block of the house is a flush gable end finished with a beaded eave board. Two exterior brick chimneys stand against this elevation. A six-panel door is located between these two chimneys which originally opened onto a porch in front of the hyphen. A tall and narrow window opening, possible a four-

Following Mattingly's death in 1874, Friendly Hall was transfered to his wife Mary and two daughters, Eleanora and Margaret. In a Decree Record of 1889, the dwelling house, kitchen, meat house, and dairy were divided between the two sisters. Following their death, the property was devised to Mary E. Johnson, wife of Dr. Leonard B. Johnson, after whom Dr. Johnson Road is named.

over-four sash window, is located between the chimneys at the attic level of the elevation. This window is covered with louvered shutters.

The south elevation of the kitchen wing is pierced by a central entrance door flanked on either side by a window opening. The roof of the wing extends beyond the exterior wall, forming a porch in front of the wing. The roof is supported by square wood posts like those across the main block of the house. Only three supports survive here. The wood porch floor no longer exists and the supports rest on concrete piers. The hyphen which connects the porch and the main block of the house is pierced by a vertical panel door and a window opening with narrow beaded surrounds. The roof of the hyphen overhangs the structure's exterior wall, creating a narrow porch. This porch roof has been plastered. A two-story porch stretches across the main block of the house. The porch is supported by square posts and has an unusual star motif baluster. The east and west ends of the porch consists of a paneled baluster. The first floor porch ceiling is wainscoated while the second floor ceiling has been plastered. A beaded board surmounted by a cyma curve molding acts as the dividing line between the porch's first and second floors. The first floor is pierced by a central six-panel door with a three-light transom window flanked on either side by two windows covered either with louvered shutters or plywood. All of these windows have narrow, beaded surrounds. The second floor is pierced by a central six-panel door with four-light sidelights flanked on either side by two windows covered with louvered shutters. One of these windows is exposed, revealing a six-over-six sash window.

The west elevation of the main block is a flush gable end finished with a beaded eave board. Two exterior brick chimneys stand against this gable end. Two four-over-four sash windows pierce both the first and second floors of the house between the chimneys. One of these windows is also located at the attic level.

The interior of the house is being used for storage. The main block consists of a central hall with an open stringer stair finished with scroll decoration. The stair has a paneled waist, turned balusters, a turned newell post, and a molded hand rail. A small, six-panel door opens to a closet under the stair. All four rooms on the first floor are accessible from the stair hall through six-panel doors. Heavily molded doors also provide access between the rooms on the north side of the house to those on its south side. Both the doors and windows are surrounded by single architraves consisting of a bead, a broad band, and a quirk cyma. The southwest parlor appears to have been either the most elaborately finished room in the house or simply reworked at a later date. This room is wallpapered and was once fitted with a marble mantel, of which only a fragment of the shelf remains. The windows here are finished with rectangular panels underneath their sills as well. The walls of the remaining three first floor rooms are plastered. The mantels in these rooms are all very similar, if not identical. They consist of fluted pilasters which flank the firebox and support a five-part frieze. The frieze consists of three blocks with raised diamond panels alternating with two recessed, rectangular panels. Below the mantel shelf is a scotia molding.

The second floor of the house consists of a wide stair hall and four bedrooms. A six-panel door provides access from the hall to the second floor south portico. A twelve-light-over-two panel door provides access from the hall to the second floor north portico. Each bedroom is accessible behind a six-panel door, similar in form to those on the first floor though without the decorative molding. The bedrooms are finished with mantels similar to those on the first floor, though less highly decorated. These mantels consist of a firebox finished with a beaded surround and flanked by plain pilasters. Each mantel frieze is slightly different, though maintaining the diamond panel motif.

The stairs to the finished attic are finished with square balusters and a small turned mantel at both the second floor and attic level of the flight. The attic level consists of a small central hall lit by a skylight on the south roof slope. The two rooms on this floor are accessible behind vertical panel doors with beaded surrounds.

The interior of the kitchen building, formerly a detached kitchen, consists of one large room with a fireplace measuring about six feet in width by five feet in height against the east wall. The fireplace lintel consists of a large hewn log. A stove pipe hole is located in the chimney stack, and the hearth is paved with cement. The walls of the kitchen are plastered. The ceiling of this room is blackened with soot. Some of the wall plaster is failing, revealing sawn lath below. The doors and windows in the kitchen are finished with beaded surrounds. A winder stair in the northwest corner of the room provides access to the sleeping loft above. A vertical panel door attached with H-hinges closes this stair off from the kitchen work space. The rafters in the sleeping loft are attached at the apex of the roof with mature, machine cut nails. The gable end studs consist of hewn and sash sawn beams.

A vertical panel door provides access to the hyphen between the kitchen and the main block of the house. This hyphen consists of a passage on its south side and a pantry on its north side. The pantry is accessible behind a vertical panel door with horizontal battens. The north wall of the pantry is plastered and fitted with shelving. The east wall of the pantry is the exterior west wall of the kitchen, sheathed with weatherboard siding. This suggests that the hyphen was added at a later date.

One small gable roofed outbuilding stands about 10 feet northeast of the house. This structure faces south with its gable roof on an east/west axis. Probably a meathouse, it stands on a continuous brick foundation, is sheathed with weatherboard, and roofed with wood shingles. A vertical panel door hung on a machine made metal hinge and a wrought metal hinge pierces its south side. A vented window is located on both the east and west gable ends of the building. These flush gable ends are finished with a plain eave board while the north and south elevations are finished with a boxed cornice.

Two other outbuildings, both with concrete foundations, vertical siding sheathing, and metal roofs, are located distant from the house. One serves as a tractor shed while the other, probably a granary at one time, is used for storage. One tobacco barn stands north of the house. Many tobacco barns dot the landscape on both the east and west sides of Doctor Johnson Road.

circa 1840-1850

Friendship Hall is a large, two-story frame house with a pair of exterior chimneys at both end elevations. The two-story porch across the five-bay south facade is original to the house which is of circa 1840-1850 date. The one-story kitchen wing at the east end may be contemporary with the main block. The gable-roofed meathouse and the hip-roofed milkhouse also appear to be of the same date.

The property was owned by George Sylvester Mattingly in 1850.

Friendship Hall
Chaptico vicinity
St. Mary's County

The house is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ortiz. It was visited on August 10, 1972 by Cary Carson. The house is a large, two story, frame structure dating from about 1840-1850. The plan: a central hallway containing a staircase, and the central hallway separates four rooms, two on each side on each floor, all of which open into the hallway. The front of the house, the south elevation, has an original two story porch, supported on square columns with a lattice railing around it. The evidence for that are the upper surfaces of the house roof rafters which are free of any nails or nail holes below the place where the rafters for the porch spring off, showing that there never was any roof covering below that point. There are also two finished rooms in the attic, very low and plastered. On the back there is a small one story porch or portico over the door. Every room on the first two floors was heated by fireplace. Two, tall, narrow brick chimney shafts stand against each gable wall. No cellar. There is a kitchen wing; I don't remember whether it was the same period or later. There is a meat house and a smoke house, both of the same period apparently, although I didn't examine those as they were locked. Inside the house is quite plain. However in the left front parlor as one comes in the front door there is a handsome marble mantle which has fallen forward revealing what I assume to be evidence that the mantle is original to the house. Other rooms have rather ordinary wooden mantles. The staircase is a straight fun staircase, mounting the stairs from the back toward the front.

The house has been unlived in for about 30 or 40 years. It is unrestored, but in very good condition.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

~~CIRCA 1840~~ It is a two story frame house with a two story hyphen and one story kitchen wing. The house has a gable roof and a two story chimney at each end.

Friendly Hall is a particularly charming example of a smaller manor house of the mid 1800's. The house has not been restored. Each of the 8 rooms and the kitchen have fireplaces for heating. There is a graceful staircase and two ample attic rooms.

The house was originally in the Mattingly family later passing to the Morgans.

At present the house is used only for storage. The owners are anxious to restore the house but their absence from the U. S. and the probable high cost has dissuaded them thus far.

Friendly Hall is a large two story frame house with a pair of exterior chimneys, having two story flush pents at both end elevations.

The S. facade is five bays in length and has a rather ungainly galleried porch. There is a one story kitchen wing at the E. end which may be contemporary to the main block. The wing is connected by a one-story hyphen and has a lean-to porch.

The house is presently vacant and has been so for several years.
