Etta Gunnell Farm
Leonardtown Vicinity
Private

c. 1850s

— The main house at the Etta Gunnell Farm, a one-and-a-half-story, braced-frame, hall-parlor plan dwelling with a one-story kitchen wing, is located on a 54 acre tract at the intersection of Maryland Routes 5 and 234. Constructed in the early-1850s on a tract called "Part of Hopton Park" by Zephaniah and Mary Glovenia Nelson, the dwelling has been significantly altered by several subsequent additions and modern renovations. The dwelling, however, retains its original framing and overall form to represent a significant example of a modest landowner's dwelling. Like the Joy/Johnson House (SM-168), the house at the Etta Gunnell Farm originally featured an exterior end chimney on the north gable end and a shared stack on the south side between the south room and kitchen wing. This room arrangement was a common strategy to integrate domestic service into mid-nineteenth century dwellings. A braced frame tobacco barn with a shed addition, erected c. 1850, is located to the northwest. The tobacco barn is constructed on a stone foundation of hewn and pit sawn framing members and features intermediate vertical braces that extend or hang from structural ties to support the horizontal tobacco poles. These braces extend to the floor unlike those found in the Drydocking Farm Barn (SM-545). Together, the barn and the house provide an accurate glimpse of the mid-nineteenth century agricultural landscape in St. Mary's County.

Located on a 54.65 acre tract, the Etta Gunnell Farm is 0.2 miles north of the intersection of Deep Falls Road (Route 242) and Maryland State Route 5, near Leonardtown, Maryland. The house is approached via a 0.2 mile dirt road intermittently lined with cedar trees. The main house lies perpendicular to the dirt drive and is oriented on a east/west axis with its primary elevation facing east. The property also contains two tobacco barns. One barn, c. 1850, is oriented on a north/ south axis while the other, c. 1920s, is oriented on a east/west axis. The fields surrounding the house and barns are still cultivated, but the tract is slated for development and the house will most likely be demolished.

The main house, constructed c. 1850s, is a one-and-a-half story, four-bay, braced-frame dwelling with a stone foundation, gable roof, one story gable-end ell and several twentieth century additions and changes that obscure the house's original appearance. The entire house is sheathed with vinyl siding, while the roof is covered with asphalt shingles. There are also two brick chimneys--one exterior end chimney located on the north gable end and a chimney shared by the one story ell and the main block.

The primary or east elevation of the main block features four asymmetrically placed bays that lie behind a screened-in, vinyl covered porch with a centrally located aluminum screen door. From south to north the bays consist of a four-over-four, double-hung sash window, two modern wood doors--each with three stepped glass panes, and a six-over-six, double-hung sash window. The roof of the main block is pierced by two gable dormers. Each dormer has a one-over-one double-hung sash window. The east elevation of the one story south gable ell features a single wood door although evidence in the interior suggests that it was also once pierced by a four-over-four window.

The south elevation consists of the one story ell's gable end, the gable end of the main block and a shed roof addition and enclosed porch to the west of the main block. The ell features a centrally placed four-over-four window (now covered over) while the main block features a pair of single pane windows that light the attic story. The square shaped brick chimney, located between the ell and main block is stepped back from the main block, but is still shared by both sections. The shed roof addition to the main block features a set of paired, six-over-six windows. To the west of this shed is a porch--now entirely enclosed with vinyl sidng and topped by an aluminum awning.

The west elevation of the main section is obscured by the modern additions, but a dormer window with a set of paired six-over-six windows pierce the roof. The one story ell features a wood door and a six pane, fixed sash window. The shed roof addition features a small one-over-one window and a series of three, six-over-six and a one, one-over-one windows--all presently shaded by the vinyl enclosed porch. The shed roof addition also features another set of three, six-over-six windows. Immediately to the north of the shed addition is another one story gable roof addition that features a single exterior cinder block furnace flue.

The main house at Etta Gunnell Farm, a one-and-a-half-story, braced-frame, hall-parlor plan dwelling with a one-story kitchen wing, is located on a 54 acre tract at the intersection of Maryland Routes 5 and 234. Constructed in the early-1850s by Zephaniah and Mary Glovenia Nelson, the dwelling has been significantly altered by several subsequent additions and modern renovations. The main house, however, retains its original framing and overall form to represent a significant example of a modest landowner's dwelling. Like the Joy/Johnson House (SM-168), this dwelling originally featured an exterior end chimney on the north gable end and a shared stack on the south side between the south room and kitchen wing. This room arrangement was a common strategy to integrate domestic service into mid-nineteenth century dwellings. The tobacco barn is constructed on a stone foundation of hewn and pit sawn framing members and features intermediate vertical braces that extend from structural ties to the floor to support the horizontal tobacco poles. These braces are similar to those found in the Drydocking Farm Barn (SM-543) except these braces extend to the dirt floor.

The Etta Gunnell Farm house was constructed soon after Zephaniah Nelson purchased a 115 acre tract called "Part of Hopton Park." The tract, formerly belonging to James Thompson (of Robert), was owned by Nelson until he died in 1874. Upon his death the property was transferred to his wife as well as his eight children that included George Ignatius Nelson, John Francis Nelson, Ann Elizabeth Mills, Obediah Nelson, William Audd Nelson, Mary Francis Nelson, and Stacy Samuel Nelson. The Nelson family eventually sold the farm as the result of a circuit court case between Samuel S. Nelson et al vs Wallace Nelson et al in 1936. On January 14 of the that year, Etta Gunnell purchased the property at auction. It was during her ownership when many of the alterations to the house were done. Heirs of Ms. Gunnell owned the tract until 1990. A residential subdivision is now planned for the property.

SM-158, Etta Gunnell Farm
St. Mary's County
7.1 Description

The north elevation features the gable end of the main section and the blind gable end of the rear gable roof addition. The main section is dominated by a centrally located exterior end brick chimney with a single set of shoulders. The stone base of the chimney, while repointed and covered with portland cement, steps out two inches on the three visible sides.

The interior of the main house has been extensively remodeled obscuring the main block's original two room, single pile floor plan and its decoration. The interior has been converted into a center passage plan with a winder stair to the attic story above with all divisions in the attic now removed. No mantles or door and window trim appear to survive. The interior of the one story, one room ell remains largely intact. The room was originally unfinished as evidenced by the blackened ceiling joists and wall studs. A large, undecorated, brick fireplace with a wood lintel and a brick hearth projects into the room suggesting that this room originally served as the kitchen.

The property also features a c. 1850s tobacco barn. Resting on a stone foundation, the braced frame barn with hewn and pit sawn framing members features a single entry on the north elevation and an open shed on the south side. The entry door features wrought strap hinges and pintels. The exterior is sheathed with vertical boards and the roof is covered with raised-seam and corrugated metal. The interior is divided into ten, four foot rooms with six tiers of tobacco poles. Pit sawn and barked intermediate supports for the tobacco poles extend from the top joist to the ground. Unlike the intermediate braces that hang from a structural tie beam found at Drydocking Farm Tobacco Barn (SM-526), these supports actually touch the ground. The shed has been divided into stalls presumably for domestic farm animals. It is supported by a series of earthfast cedar posts.
