Guy Tavern
Loveville
Private

c. 1910s

The Guy Tavern, located at the rural crossroads community of Loveville, Maryland, is a significant two story, frame, commercial building with an uncommon steeply pitched, almost pyramidal roof. Erected in the 1910s, the Guy Tavern/Loveville Lounge epitomizes the roadside commercial development that occurred in Loveville in the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century. As a store, tavern, dance hall, restaurant, and dwelling, the building has served a number of versatile uses since it was initially constructed.

— In 1922 Claude E. and J. Warren Guy (the cousin of "Shine" Guy) purchased the 1/2 acre property from Benjamin and Hersie April. From 1922-1973, members of the Guy family operated a tavern, restaurant, and dance hall. According to J. Warren "Shine" Guy, the tavern was the social center for the local area. In the 1930s Mr. Guy worked at the tavern and can remember 10 cent sandwiches such as the #7 special; a sandwich made of lettuce, tomato, mayonaise, and ham. Mr. Guy also remembers a drink that was once served at the tavern called the Loveville Special--a shot of whiskey with bitters, ginger ale, and a cherry for 15 cents. Dances were held at the tavern on the weekends and was a prime attraction for local residents seeking entertainment.

— While the Guy Tavern has been considerably altered since it was initially constructed, the building remains intimately tied to the development of Loveville as a rural crossroads commercial and social center. Like the Bullock Store (SM-586) and the Love House and Store (SM-580) (store now demolished), the tavern contributes to the significance of the town.

The Guy Tavern is located on the northwest corner of Pincushion Road and Maryland Route 5 in the rural crossroads community of Loveville, Maryland. The building is oriented on a east/west axis and is situated on a flat 1.02 acre parcel. The property is bounded on the east and south by roads and by trees to the west and north.

The Guy Tavern is a two story, three bay, frame commercial building with a steep pyramidal roof that is interrupted, presumably for ventilation, near the peak. Since it was initially constructed in the 1910s, the building has undergone significant alterations. A one story brick addition with a shed roof presently creates a skirt around the entire building. The brick walls were constructed of modern machine made bricks that vary in color. The roof of the addition is covered with tar paper. The walls of the original building have been covered with vinyl siding. At the intersection of the wall and roof is a wide frieze and box cornice. The roof is sheathed with pressed-tin metal shingles.

The primary or south elevation consists of the brick addition and the second floor of the original building. The brick addition is pierced by a modern door that is flanked to the east by one circular window and to the west by three circular windows. A sign reading "Loveville Lounge (Tom's Place)" partially covers the three windows to the south. The second floor of the original building is pierced by three, symmetrically aligned, two-over-two, double-hung sash windows. The roof on this elevation is pierced by a shed dormer with two, single pane windows.

The west elevation consists of the one story brick addition and the second story of the original building. The brick addition is pierced by a modern door flanked to the north by one circular window and to the south by three circular windows. One of the circular windows has been removed for an air conditioning unit. Immediately over the door is a open bed, gable roof awning. The second floor of the tavern is pierced by one, four-over-four window and two, two-over-two windows. The roof on this elevation is pierced by a brick chimney flue.

The brick addition on the north elevation is pierced by a centrally located modern door flanked to the east by two, small, glass block windows and to the west by two louvered openings. The second floor of the main block is pierced by four, two-over-two windows.

The brick addition on the east elevation is pierced by a middle door flanked to the south by two circular windows and to the north by one circular window. The ends of the brick addition do not form right angles. On the south end the angle is cut to allow for a sliding glass window, presumably for walk up liquor sales. On the north end the angle is broken into three sides to accommodate a two story, three sided bay of the main block. The second floor of the main block is pierced by two, two-over-two windows and one, two-over-one window. Each side of the three sided bay of the main block is pierced by a two-over-two window. A shed roof dormer projects from the roof of the building and features four, small, single pane windows.

The interior was not investigated.
