DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Snug Harbor is situated at the head of a cove on the north side of Trippe Creek.

The house was built in 1920 after an earlier dwelling had burned in that year. Snug Harbor is built along simple Colonial Revival lines with what appears to be a three bay, two and one-half story main section with a perpendicular wing on the east, then a three bay long, two story wing and finally a passage and outbuilding. Its north facade has changed little since it was constructed except that it is painted grey with white trim, whereas, it was originally painted white. On the west side of the dwelling is an outside brick wing housing a swimming pool, this was built in the 60's and is a poor compliment to the rest of the building.

The north facade has 8/8 sash on both storys, with paneled shutters below and louvered shutters above. The three dormers have 6/6 sash and 'A' roofs. The main roof is covered with slate and a chimney rises within each end. The entrance has a delicately executed porch with elliptical ceiling matching the outline of the fanlight. The door has sidelights. Projecting from the other part is the wing with applied pilasters and pediment. Between the two outer pilasters are windows on both storys. A chimney rises from the apex of the pediment. The kitchen wing is very plain.

Originally, a one story porch extended on two sides of the house, the west and south. The west porch was consumed in the pool extension and the south porch has been enclosed except for the two story pedimented portico which still retains both porches, the upper with Chinese trellis balustrade.

Its plan originally consisted of a very large living room in the main part of the dwelling with stair ascending along the south wall. In the perpendicular wing was a dining room and finally in the kitchen wing was a pantry and office and kitchen. Between the dining room and den was a back stair and in the northeast corner was a stair to the servants room. The present plan is unknown.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Snug Harbor is representative of the type dwellings being constructed in Talbot County in 1920 by an upper middle class family. Its plan is not usual in that it had one large living room more typical of summer houses. The building was not, however, intended only for summer habitation, but as an all year round dwelling.

Charles E. Humphreys, for whom the dwelling was constructed, had been an executive with the Telephone Company of Philadelphia before retiring to Talbot in 1917. He died in 1929 and the property remained in the family until 1948.
