These apartments are housed in a long three story brick building. There is an entrance to the apartments on William Street and another entrance on the narrow facade facing High Street. The windows all have stone jack arches and stone sills. Contrasting stone quoins mark the corners of the building. The entrance on William Street is identical to the one on High Street. The six paneled door has flanking sidelights, and a transom above with a radial pattern muntins. Fluted pilasters frame the door, and above is a plain pediment. On either side of the entrance bay, is a small three story porch, screened on the first and second stories, but fully enclosed on the third story. These porches are supported by massive rectangular brick columns. Around the edges of the screened porches are ballustrades with plain, but large, rectangular ballusters. There are similar porches opposite the entrance on High Street.

Located on the corner of High and William Streets, this three story tall, long rectangular brick apartment building was probably constructed around the 1930's. The entrance on High Street, identical to the one on William Street, is a six paneled door with flanking sidelights and pilasters. Above is a transeam with a radial pattern ornamentation. On either side of the entrance bay are 3 story perches, screened on the first and second story, but fully enclosed on the third story. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This 20th century apartment building is fairly plain in design with the exception of the ornate Federal style entrances and the quoins at the corners of the building. Of more recent construction than most of the buildings on this part of High St (one of the oldest streets in Cambridge) this building is not particularly significant from an architectural or historical point of view, although the classical details lend to its compatibility with the historic character of High St.
