DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Kimbolden is an early 19th or late 18th century brick house with so many frame additions that the old house is barely visible. In this century, the building was a part of a large dairy farm and most of the additions, including the concrete block garage, appear to date from that time.

The old house is three bays wide and two rooms deep with a side hall and chimneys enclosed in the opposite gable. The building has a gable roof (now subsumed under a later roof) with an overhanging cornice and return; it may have had dormers. It is one and one-half stories tall and stands on a tall brick basement. The enclosed chimney contained three flues: one for each first floor room and one for a central fireplace in the second floor chamber. All but one first floor fireplace, completely rebuilt, have been removed, but old arches remain in the basement.

Windows on the front facade are evenly spaced; their 6/6 sash windows are held in narrow, beaded frames. Fragments of cast iron shutter dogs remain. The main entrance has similar trim, with transom lights and a round arch opening; the door is modern. Window arches are not visible but appear to be flat. Window openings in the second floor gable, probably for 6/6 sash, have been bricked in. Basement windows have iron bars.

The main facade has Flemish bond brick walls with grapevined mortar joints and a molded water table. Other walls are laid in Liverpool bond. Walls have been whitewashed and painted.

Only the old dog leg stair remains inside. It has an open string with round tapered balusters and round handrail. The newel is turned with block base and simple cap which joins the handrail. The spandrel has five recessed panels with applied moldings. There is a door beneath the landing with trim with bull's eye corner blocks. A few old six-panel door, at least one with a box lock, remain in use. All other interior finishes are modern.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Kimbolden, (This is sometimes confused with Kimbolton, a frame house located near Rock Hall) is significant, despite its alterations, because it is a rather unusual old Kent house. One and one-half story buildings, common in the hall and parlor type of the 18th century are less so in later periods. Similar houses, Mitchell House (K-276) and Blay's Range (K-137) both have wide enclosed end chimneys and side hall plans, but are two and one-half stories tall. The interior stair is pleasant and resembles that at the Edick House (K-180) in proportioning and detail. Hopefully future users of the house may be able to regain some of the antique character of the building.

Kimbolden may be an 18th century house, although the earliest woodwork which remains on the first story dates from the 1830-1840 period. Originally the house was a one-and-one-half story brick building laid in Flenish bond on a very high basement which had a quarter round molded water table and segmental arches above the openings. The door is located on the southwest side of the three bay house. It still retains one huge chimney on the northeast gable which services the fireplace for three rooms.

Off the northeast gable was originally a frame one story kitchen wing which has been replaced by concrete block garage. On the southwest is an old two-and-one-half story frame wing, two bays long. On each side of the main roof is a huge dormer with "A" roof covering the entire length of the house. Later additions have been added on all sides, so that it is difficult to locate the old section, especially from the southeast.
