Ingleside (Site)
Eastern Neck Island
patented 1659

Ingleside was built on part of Hynson's Division, the name given to the northern half of Eastern Neck Island in 1680, at the time of the death of its owner, Thomas Hynson. From 1659 until that year, Hynson had owned the island in conjunction with Joseph Wickes. On the northern half, the earlier patents of Market Place and Elke Point were resurveyed and incorporated into Hynson's Division.

Hynson's Division remained in the Hynson family through several generations, until 320 acres were sold to John Stoops, a Cecil County farmer in 1771.¹ Three years later, Stoops sold the land in two parcels to Richard and Ann Jones (probably his daughter and son-in-law).² By 1783, Richard Jones had died and Ann had married again, this time Charles Chambers.

Through a series of mortgages involving the estate of John Hynson, the final deed was recorded in 1796.⁴ It is unclear from the records who was actually responsible for the construction of the house on the property in the 1790's, since David Jones, his mother, and his step-father were all listed as joint owners of the farm.

The house, built by either Jones or Chambers, was a substantial brick house, composed of two sections. The tall, three-bay, two-story section was built over a full basement and had windows flanking the chimney stack on the west gable. The one-and-a-half-story wing was built close to ground level. Both sections measured about 20' x 28'. In form it was nearly identical to Rosedale, located north of Rock Hall. At some period in its development, a small shed-roof addition was constructed on the north side of the wing, creating a plan that was identical to Godlington Manor. At another time a frame section was attached to the east end, but it was moved away after 1957.

When Charles Chambers died in 1801, there was no mention of real estate in his will. And, when David Jones died, there was no will.⁵ In 1830, the Sheriff sold a half interest in the farm to Hiram Jones, since Jesse, David Jones' son, was bankrupt.⁶ The second half interest in the farm was purchased from Jesse Jones' sister and niece in 1834.⁷

After Hiram Jones' death, the "Island Farm" as it had come to be known, was purchased by his son, David Jones.⁸ His name appears on both the 1860 Martinet Map and the 1877 Atlas.

In the 20th century, the farm was owned by the Johnston and White families who used the farm for a private gunning preserve. The property was acquired in the 1960's by the U. S. Government as part of the Eastern Neck Island Wildlife Preserve.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Ingleside site is currently a picnic area on the northwestern end of the Eastern Neck National Wildlife Refuge. After the property was acquired by the U.S. Government in 1962, the old house which stood on the property was burned and bulldozed.

The old brick house which stood on the site measured approximately 20' x 28'; was two stories tall and had a 1½ story brick service wing also measuring 20' x 28'. In size and fenestration it was nearly identical to Rosedale, on Swan Creek.

From old photos, the three bay south facade appears to have had either a belt course at second floor level or the remains of a one story porch roof. The windows of the 1st floor had 9/6 sash and those on the second had 6/6. Louvered shutters flanked the windows on the main part. The brick bond is indistinguishable, but the jack arches appear to have been rubbed and gauged. In all probability the South facade was Flemish bond and the other Common bond. On the west gable was a frame cellar bulkhead on the north side of the chimney and a window on the south side. Two windows flanked the chimney on the second and attic stories, the latter windows having 4/2 sash.

The service wing had two windows and a door between. The south door appears to have opened into the pantry or west room, whereas the north door (a window in the photo) appears to have opened into the kitchen or east room. Both sides of the tin covered 'A' roof had two dormers with 6/6 sash. A small frame 8' x 8' pod or leanto had been built onto the pantry at a later date, a feature similar to Godlington Manor, and in the same location.

In 1957, the Rock Hall Historical Collection published a photo of the house taken from the Southwest. In the same year, H.C. Forman photographed the house from the Northeast. Both photos indicated a smaller one room frame addition on the east gable with board and batten siding and a tin roof. By the time the property was acquired by the National Park Service, the frame wing had been detached from the house and moved several yards to the east, in the company of several outbuildings.

According to local tradition, the house was built in 1792, which seems like a plausible date. During that period the farm was owned by Charles and Ann Chambers and her son David Jones.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Ingleside was built on part of "Hynson's Division", the name given to the northern half of Eastern Neck Island in 1680. Joseph Wickes and Thomas Hynson were joint owners of the Island from 1659 until the latter's death in 1680. "Market Place" and "Elke Point" were patents, on the northern part of the Island, which after Hynson's death were incorporated into the new "Hynson's Division". Joseph Wickes was allocated the southern part of the Island in that division, retaining the name given to the first tract, "Wickliffe".

"Hynson's Division" remained in the Hynson family through several generations, until John Hynson (son of John) sold 320 acres to John Stoops, a Cecil County farmer, in 1771. Three years later he sold the land in two parcels to Richard and Ann Jones, probably his daughter and son-in-law. By 1783, Richard Jones had died and Ann re-married Charles Chambers. (Chambers is listed in the Tax Assessment with 320 acres). David Jones, son of Richard and Ann, took over the property in the 1790's. David is probably the builder of the house and it was his family who changed the name of this farm to Ingleside. From David Jones it passed to his son Jesse. From Jesse, it was transferred to Hiram Jones, who lived at Rosedale. After Hiram's death it went to another David Jones, the grandson of the builder. David Jones is indicated the owner on both the 1860 Map and 1877 Atlas.
