DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

A late Gothic Revival (1887) brick church Christ Methodist Church was built in an irregular cruciform shape. It has a rough granite block base and sandstone trim around windows, on buttresses and as belt coursing. Much of this sandstone is spalling.

The High St. or northern facade has a massive two storey gothic arch with three supporting gothic stained glass windows topped by three circular windows of a quatrefoil design. This is flanked by two buttresses and stained glass Gothic windows. Above the gothic arch is a massive circular window containing quatrefoils and above that, below the gable pediment, are three rectangular ventilator windows. The west facade, front, facing both north and west, contains a 2½ storey turrett with spire, dormer and 4 part finial. Decorative devices are gothic windows, circular windows and tile motifs under the cornice.

The western axis has a storey and ½ extension for the church office and rector's study, with entrance through the section possessing the turrett.

The dominant element of the building on the eastern axis is the bell tower, three stories high with massive spire surrounded by four shorter spires and containing 4 ventilator dormers.. The main entrance into the name is through the front of the bell tower.

The church has the original slate roof with interesting snow stops at the foot of the roof. Part of the decorative motif is missing from the top of the front gable. The main part of the church has 4 dormers, 2 on each side, on the roof, with rectangular stained glass windows, to admit light. The two storey sanctuary protrudes slightly from the southern gable and originally had 3 stained glass windows. One was removed to permit entry from the 1949 Parish House, which now partially encloses the old sanctuary.

Buttresses and gothic stained glass windows are used throughout on the first floor. The original fabric of the church is almost totally complete save the finial missing from the front gable and the inclusion of the sanctuary into the new Parish house.

From the bell tower to the street the brick is of the pressed variety and there is a rusticated granite base to the building. From the bell tower south the appearance is different, the brick of a softer type, etc. as this part was hidden from public view by a house on the corner lot (which is now gone). The western axis is almost totally screened by a house and is the same as the east from the bell tower back.

Christ Church is eight bays deep and five bays wide. (The actual facade is only three bays.) The entrance is in a tower facing the street which is the fourth bay back from the facade. The tower is square with buttresses projecting from the corners. It reaches nearly to the ridge of the main building. At this height, there are four small turrets and finally a very steep octagonal spire with metal crown at the apex. The windows have gothic arches and those within the tower and on what would be called the facade(s) are surrounded by a greenish stone as well as a band at window sill level and the projecting portions of the buttresses.

The street facade has a large three part window with gothic tracery and two smaller windows. At eye level there is a small rose window and above that, a three part louvered opening.

At the west of the facade stands a smaller hexagonal tower. There are stair glass window throughout. The (good)
