Sidney Gadd Farm
Centreville private

mid-19th Century
late 19th Century
1982

The Sidney Gadd Farm, south of Centreville, is a very plain mid-19th century three bay, two and one half story frame building. Its form is quite similar to the 1735 White Marsh Farm in Talbot. It is unusual for that date in that the original kitchen was in the basement where there is a cooking fireplace. The late 19th century hip roof wing is an interesting contrast to the original. It may be on a tract called Demby.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Sidney Gadd Farm is located on the west side of U.S. Rt. 213, the first farm south of the intersection of Md. Rt. 18. It is a mid-19th century 2 1/2 story, 3 bay vernacular dwelling facing east, with a late 19th century hip-roof wing on the west. A more recent wing is being completed on the south side of the house.

The original three bay 2 1/2 story dwelling is built over a brick basement. Grey cedar shingle siding covers the original lapped weatherboard. The entrance is located in the center bay and has a 4-panel door with 4-pane transom above. Its frame and all of the windows are a narrow beaded frame. The large windows have 6/6 sash and louvered blinds. Two small 6/6 sash dormers on each side of the 'A' roof light the 3rd floor. Two large chimneys rise within the gables. There is a very plain box cornice.

On the west side of the building is a two-bay square hip roof structure with screened porch on its south, an enclosed laundry on the west and a family room on the north, all with shed roofs. The roof of the main addition overhangs the walls with exposed rafters having shaped ends.

7.1 DESCRIPTION

The 1982 addition is a small hyphen and 1 1/2 story wing with gable to the road. It is faced with brick.

Inside, the house has the central passage and two-room plan. The stair ascends on the south wall to a landing and then in a final few steps to the upper hall. It has bold, but simple, newels, round hand rail and square balusters. The detail is the same as the W. H. Cook Farm near Hayden. A wide opening has been cut into the north room (living room) and a smaller opening gives access to the south room (den). The original four-panel back door is in place and is well weathered.

Both living room and den have very plain classically influenced mantels. Two windows flank the living room chimney breast, but only one is located east of the den chimney. Originally there was a basement stair beneath the main stair; it, however, was removed and the space is now a closet. The basement beneath this section contains a cooking fireplace on the south gable. The original windows in the basement were taller than usual and probably had a six-pane sash. When the wing was added on the west, a stair was built to the basement. This has since been removed and the only access is from the new wing basement where the outline of an old bulkhead with 'A' roof is visible.

The back wing (west) contains a dining room, kitchen and lavatory. There was originally a stair from the dining room to the room above and another above the kitchen, a second stair from the kitchen led to a small isolated maid's room.

The trim throughout is very plain.
